ambassadorship

Kim Fontaine and her band traveled to Austin, Texas, for the influential SXSW (South by Southwest) Conference in 2007, taking a little bit of Saskatchewan with them. There, they jostled with 15,000 other musicians, songwriters and other music industry professionals from around the world for attention.

Fontaine says it was great to see other Saskatchewan performers collaborating in their networking initiatives. "Everyone did his or her part in promoting the province and its emerging music scene."

In conversation, the talent pool of the province often came up, Fontaine says, "with many industry people acknowledging that a buzz is starting to form around Saskatchewan."

The Austin connection was even more important in 2008, when Fontaine made a second appearance, along with Ultimate Power Duo, The Blood Lines and several other Saskatchewan acts. They put together a Saskatchewan music showcase in addition to their own festival slots.

SUCCESS

A rising star in visual arts is 31-year-old Wally Dion, whose playful sculptural work marries modern technology to traditional craft, and puns on the word “red” in his heroic depiction of blue-collar Indians.

Dion, a Salteaux who was born and raised in Saskatoon, received his BFA from the University of Saskatchewan in 2004 and quickly began to make a name for himself as an innovative artist exploring Indigenous art traditions, while supporting himself both as an art teacher with the Saskatoon Community Youth

Arts Program and with commissioned portraiture work. His portraits often make use of a number of small canvasses combined to produce a larger whole, sometimes with as many as ten panels, creating a large-scale work.

Dion likes to use a quote circulating on the Internet to characterize his approach to art: “If you risk nothing, you risk everything.” He says, “Being an artist is such a big risk financially. As well, there are risks to be taken in the work one does. In the end, all I do is the foot/leg work and leave the results up to God/fate.”

future

The Globe Theatre's Actor Conservatory Training Program is an intensive process: six days a week for 16 weeks, a regime of study that's akin to a post-graduate experience for students, many of whom are already theatre school grads.

Jayden Pfeifer, coordinator of the Globe Theatre School, says the conservatory program "puts a real emphasis on creating well-rounded actors." Students come out of it with an appreciation for theatre as art, not just performance.

What makes this training so good, he claims, is that "we have a real depth of understanding of what actors need. The program is designed to highlight the students' strengths and work on areas that need improvement."

One of the key things young actors need to learn, Pfeifer says, is "how theatre relates to everything" – not just memorizing lines, but movement, timing, voice and a host of other ingredients.

One of the Globe Theatre School's regular faculty members, Daniel Maslany, a composer, filmmaker and actor, received the 2008 Emerging Artist Award at the Regina Mayor's Arts and Business Awards. Maslany is taking a break from teaching to further his acting skills in the conservatory program.

Ultimate Power Duo, which is actually a trio, took its “demolition rock” sound to England, on a 15-show, 16-day tour made possible by the Arts Board.

Described by one British critic as “purveyors of three-minute punk pop perfection”, the band includes singer/guitarist Scott Pilling (Scott RP), bassist Brennan Risling (The Riz) and drummer Amber Kraft (AKdoubleAK). By the time they started the tour, they were already veterans of hundreds of shows, four EPs and one full-length recording.

Back home, the threesome wrote a thank you letter to the Arts Board: “From city to city, show to show, we were continually asked how we were able to afford the trip.”

“Everyone we talked to was immediately impressed by the commitment the Saskatchewan Arts Board has to their artists, to create unbelievable opportunities which may not be otherwise possible,” they wrote.

connections

Art and agriculture came together at the Canadian Western Agribition with a unique artist-in-residence program. As many as 1,000 students visiting Agribition in November 2007 worked with Regina artist Gerri Ann Siwek to create an eight-metre-long mural representing the Saskatchewan landscape.

"Working on the mural provided the students with an opportunity to be creatively involved with Agribition by connecting the sight, sound and smell of Agribition with their painting," Siwek says. The mural's theme was Creating Rural and Urban Communities, but "the students, mostly from urban centres, seemed much more interested in painting rural themes," says Siwek.

The project also had an environmental theme, as all of the supplies used to create it were recycled and/or recyclable.

The most rewarding part for Siwek was seeing the mural's progression day by day. "It grew very quickly and in five days, it was complete. There was so much artwork that on the last day, I had to build another panel that we placed in front of the mural," she says.

They look like natural outcroppings – smooth, egg-like boulders rising out of the grassy hillside on Saskatoon’s River Landing. Instead, the seven concrete and steel “boat hulls” are an interactive art installation by Prairie Design Group. The sculptures are big enough for an adult to sit inside and perfect for kids playing hide and seek.

“The work is evocative and playful, so perceptions change and curiosity builds as the viewers move around the piece,” says one of the sculpture’s creators, Charley Ferrero.

The other members of Prairie Design Group are Mel Bolen, Michael Hosaluk and Sean Whalley.

The installation was commissioned by the Saskatchewan Arts Board in partnership with the City of Saskatoon to celebrate the city’s centennial and its 2006 Cultural Capital of Canada designation.

“Though controversial at times, public art installations show the creative work of our artists and send the message that here in Saskatchewan, art is for everyone,” says Arts Board Executive Director Jeremy Morgan.

creativity

Mark Wihak's Regina-made movie River has been a darling of the film festival circuit, debuting at the Montreal Film Festival and going on to a number of others, including Calgary, Vancouver and Whistler, where a jury that included Atom Egoyan selected it for the shortlist for best new Canadian feature. In 2008, at Toronto's Canadian Film Fest, it picked up three awards, including the Reel Canadian Indie Award, given to the best independent film of the year.

"The best of the fest is this wry, talky tale of misfits in love," wrote Toronto's Eye

Magazine. "It's a striking feature debut."

Co-star Adam Budd won best actor honours in Toronto, to match the best actress nod that Maya Batten-Young scored at Whistler. Both actors are recent graduates of the University of Regina film school, where Wihak teaches. River also won for best screenplay, which gave Wihak and his lead actors a laugh, since most of the script was improvised. The characters Batten-Young and Budd play are loosely based on poet and rock singer Patti Smith and photographer Robert Mapplethorpe.

Lindsay Knight, also known as Eekwol, is on a roll, thanks in part to using the Internet to market her music to the world. The niece of well-known musician Chester Knight, she's made several albums of her own, winning the Best Rap or Hip Hop Album Award at the 2005 Canadian Aboriginal Music Awards, and has appeared on numerous compilation disks.

She finds herself using the Internet more and more, with a presence on Facebook,

MySpace and YouTube. These networking sites are so successful, she dropped her own webpage. "I found I could do everything I wanted to without it."

Knight uses these sites for sales, trading of musical licks with other artists, keeping in touch with fans, and networking. She has several songs up on her MySpace page, where they've been played more than 40,000 times. "I work the Internet from all angles. You can do just about everything on the Internet," she says.

Chair's Message

This year's annual report celebrates the creativity that underpins our way of life in Saskatchewan. Our people and communities have always been creative: from our earliest days here, when creativity was necessary for survival in our harsh climate, to the present, where the creativity of individuals, organizations, government and business has helped our province's economy grow and thrive, leaving its "have not" status far behind.

The arts sector makes a major contribution to our standard of living in Saskatchewan, both socially and economically. This report contains numerous examples of artists and organizations who are serving as ambassadors of our province to the world; passing knowledge and skills on to a new generation; using innovation and new technology to reach broader audiences; provoking thought and discussion in our communities; and reflecting unique and diverse voices in their work.

With such a wealth of talent and creativity in this province, it is no surprise that Saskatchewan is home to the oldest arts agency in North America. The Saskatchewan Arts Board has been pleased to help build a strong foundation for our artistic community over the past 60 years, and we are sure the next 60 years will be even more innovative and exciting.

I have been honoured to serve on the Arts Board for the past six years, particularly these last two as chair. In that time, we have been able to establish a solid governance system for the agency, and significantly expand our mandate, funding and partnerships.

The members of the board take great pride in how the Arts Board continues to be responsive to our community and public service mandate and finds new and creative ways to deliver on this mandate. I want to thank my colleagues on the board, as well as staff and community members for all of their efforts in helping us build a fertile climate where creativity continues to grow and thrive in our artistic community and across the province.

Arts Board

Executive Director's Message

I have always been able to promise prospective board members and employees that they will find their work exciting, full of change and a test of their capacity. But 2007-08 was something else: in October, the Arts Board received a 100 per cent increase in funding as well as new strategic and program responsibilities; less than six months later, there was a major reversal in the province's budget for 2008-09. This unique occurrence has left us with some challenges but may also have given the arts community new opportunities.

The results of these events are found in the audited financial statements in this report. The Arts Board distributed a good deal of the additional revenues from 2007 (taking care not to build them into our base budgets and community expectations) but held a certain amount in reserve, pending a better sense of the new government's intentions. These funds will be spent in fiscal 2008-09 to prepare us for the changes we anticipate and address pressures that have been affecting the community for some time.

The Arts Board is also committed to a process of review and renewal. In celebration of our 60th anniversary and to prepare for future growth, we are engaging communities around the province in renewing our strategic plan by inviting them to share ideas and guidance for our next 60 years. For a detailed look at our budget plans for 2008-09, please visit www.artsboard.sk.ca.

Our anniversary prompts us to look at where we are going, partly on the basis of our history. We have a rich legacy developed by 60 years of community achievement through the work of artists, arts organizations, board members, volunteers and staff.

I am always excited and energized by the dedication, professionalism and sheer creative drive of my colleagues. They have such a hunger to support the work of our artists and arts organizations and to extend this work to all the people of the province. On behalf of everyone who works in the arts in Saskatchewan, we thank them all.

The theme of this year's report is Creative Saskatchewan. It is about a society typified by a spirit of inquiry, a drive to create, and a willingness to nurture an environment for this spirit to flourish. An important part of our economy is based on the development of knowledge and the resources of the creative individual. Many contemporary thinkers – Robert Palmer, Richard Florida and Daniel Pink, to name a few – have their own distinctive approaches, but all agree that creative minds and creative inquiry are critical to the success of any contemporary society, including its economy. Artists are an essential part of this economy and the philosophy that underpins it.

In this dynamic environment, we will continue to celebrate and support the unique mix of individual fulfillment and community commitment that fuels the arts in Saskatchewan.

CALL

Bringing Saskatchewan to the world

Saskatchewan artists are globetrotters and ambassadors for their province to the rest of the country and world. This past year, a whole new crop of Saskatchewan ambassadors has been representing this province on the world stage.

Mark Wihak's Regina-made movie River has been a darling of the Canadian film festival circuit (see page 6). The thoughtful filmmaker, who had previously made a number of award-winning documentaries, says he suspects "some people are surprised that any film, let alone a film like River, can come from here; indeed some of the reviews commented on the novelty of the film's Regina setting."

River, he says, "is very explicitly set in Saskatchewan and I'm happy if some people in Saskatchewan see a reflection of their world in the film. I think one thing 'art' does is help us to see ourselves better." He says he's glad people elsewhere in the country have watched his film and understood the little universe his main characters have created for themselves "in this place with the extraordinarily flat landscape and the very direct light and the hard-to-pronounce name."

Wihak gives full credit to the Saskatchewan Arts Board for its support of River and his career. "I probably would never have pursued filmmaking without (its) encouragement," he says.

River, which was made on a $125,000 shoestring, will be broadcast on SCN in fall 2008, so the people of Saskatchewan will have the opportunity to see a film their financial support made possible.

Saskatchewan music has also reached far beyond the Saskatchewan border. The Blood Lines, Ultimate Power Duo, Kim Fontaine and Little Miss Higgins are just a few acts that have toured the country, the continent and even the world this past year, bringing a little bit of Saskatchewan with them. All of them have received Arts Board funding.

Fontaine and her band traveled to Austin, Texas, for the influential SXSW (South by Southwest) Conference in 2007 (see inside front cover.)

While Fontaine was taking care of business in Texas, another Saskatchewan singer, Jolene Higgins – better known by her stage name, Little Miss Higgins – was taking a break from the road, getting deep into herself as part of a songwriting retreat helped out by Arts Board financial support. Higgins had toured relentlessly for the previous four years and needed a break. She'd played all over the country, from Newfoundland to Yellowknife, been nominated for Outstanding Blues Recording at the 2006 Western Canadian Music Awards, won the People's Choice Award for one of her songs at the 2006 Independent Music Awards, scored a Juno nomination with her second album, Junction City (which also received Arts Board funding), and – a real thrill for her – opened for blues legend Buddy Guy at a concert in Regina.

Another thrill came this spring when she was voted Favourite Blues Artist/Group or Duo of the Year at the annual Independent Music Awards in Toronto.

The Blood Lines and Ultimate Power Duo have gone even farther afield from their home stomping grounds in Saskatoon. Ultimate Power Duo, which is actually a trio, brought its “demolition rock” sound to England, on a 15-show, 16-day tour (see page 3). The Blood Lines, hailed as “one of the hottest new rock sensations” by Edmonton’s See Magazine, made it all the way to China.

A small Arts Board grant helped the band tour to Toronto, Montreal and New York City, to take part in the NXNE (North by Northeast) Festival, where their audience “was lined up down the block,” recalls bassist and band leader S.J. Kardash, and they made some valuable contacts. One of them led to their being invited to the Beijing Pop Festival, playing alongside major bands like Nine Inch Nails, the New York Dolls and Public Enemy.

Since then, The Blood Lines have been on a roll, winning the Outstanding Rock Recording trophy at the 2007 Western Canadian Music Awards and playing the SXSW showcase in Austin, a gig that landed their photo on the cover of The New York Times.

“Along the way, the Saskatchewan Arts Board has been an enormous help,” says Kardash. “We are so lucky to live in a province that knows the value of the arts, because without art, what kind of legacy would we leave behind?”

The Blood Lines is made up of two sets of siblings in their 20s: Kardash and his sister Maygen (drums), and Paul (guitar) and Barrett Ross (keyboards).

“Saskatchewan is an amazing place to live and create,” says Kardash. “As an artist from Saskatchewan, though, you have to know the importance of venturing out of the province to share your work with the world. Our province is fairly isolated from the bloodstream of the music industry, but by more and more local artists traveling the world and showcasing their work, we’re beginning to bring Saskatchewan closer to the arteries. It feels really good to know The Blood Lines are playing a part in the evolution.”

Saskatoon artist gets national profile

Few young musicians have been as lauded, yet remained as humble, as Saskatoon’s Raymond Ko.

Named one of the “Top 20 Under 20” Canadians by Youth in Motion last year, Ko followed up by winning the 27th Concerto Competition held by the Saskatchewan Music Festival Association, earning him a prize of $2,000 and the right to be a featured soloist with the Regina and Saskatoon symphony orchestras. He has also won first prize in strings at the National Music Festival and was a TD Canada Trust $60,000 scholarship winner.

Ko is in his final year as a science student at the University of Saskatchewan. Although he could likely look forward to success as a concert violinist, he hopes to combine the musical side of his life with a career as a pediatric ophthalmologist.

Ko’s love of children has also led to a sideline interest: working musically with autistic kids. It’s a program he hopes his new national exposure will benefit.

Despite all these achievements, Ko says, “My parents are my role models and seeing them care for others in the Chinese community, such as taking the elderly to hospitals and translating for them, has a great impact on me.”

Students challenge stereotypes

Students at Scott Collegiate, located in the heart of North Central Regina, are making art to challenge negative stereotypes. When they saw the Maclean's magazine article calling North Central the "Worst neighbourhood in Canada", two groups of students shot back with the help of professional artists and the Saskatchewan Arts Board.

In one case, a dilapidated kitchen was the spark. In the other, it was a desire to show the neighbourhood as it really is.

Scott Collegiate's commercial cooking teacher Raegan Vollman complained to the principal that her kitchen needed an extreme makeover. She wanted to get the students involved. The principal's advice: "Make it curricular."

Other teachers got involved, including English and math teacher Chris Beingessner, a former member of Regina's General Fools improvisational troupe. The idea of a dinner theatre was hatched, and Beingessner had the inspiration to tap into community anger over the Maclean's article.

Meanwhile, freelance photographer Mark Taylor was thinking along the same lines. Working part-time for the North Central Community Association, he developed a knowledge and love of the neighbourhood. He and Scott art teacher Susan Bear applied for an ArtsSmarts grant that would put cameras in the hands of students to record life in their neighbourhood.

The Maclean's story was fresh in people's minds and was powerful currency. "Maclean's had become a bad word and everyone wanted to show that North Central wasn't really that bad," says Taylor.

As student Cherette Sebastian put it, "I just kind of went out and took pictures, but after a while there was a theme to it, showing that not everything that's around here is always negative."

The project culminated in a week-long exhibit in June 2008 at the T.C. Douglas Building. Some of the photos were also on display at the Regina Police Station.

In all, 15 students took part in the four-month photojournalism project. "The kids were really enthusiastic and excited right from the beginning," Taylor says, "but when they saw the first developed shots, they really opened up." Several of them, he says, have become "camera addicts."

At the same time, Chris Beingessner and his drama troupe were plotting a dinner theatre at the school.

The kids came up with idea of doing a show, the teacher says. "I found some stories about North Central in the media and got them talking. Our first step was to turn the articles into found poems. Then it clicked that we could tell stories that hadn't been told. But the target grew to be the bad news media in general, not just Maclean's."

A small grant from the Arts Board allowed Beingessner to hire Rob Appleby, a friend from General Fools days, and his wife, Dionne Fisher, an experienced actor, writer, director and stage manager, to help out. The University of Regina Theatre Department and Regina's Globe Theatre got involved as well. With Fisher acting as dramaturge, the students' poems evolved into short monologues. Gradually, a structure took shape, built around Saturday Night Live-style "newscasts," followed by a chorus of reactions.

Another group of students prepared the meal and a third group was involved in marketing, fundraising and other logistical tasks.

On the final night, it all came together, with students cooking and serving a first-rate meal to 250 paying guests, and putting on a show that combined theatre, music and chutzpah.

"What a night," says Saskatchewan Arts Board Arts and Learning Consultant Dianne Warren. "There was a standing ovation from the crowd for the play and I overheard a teacher in tears about the impact the project has had on the kids. I couldn't help but think how a little grant from the Arts Board can grow into a huge project."

A sense of self

Contemporary art refuses to reside within the boundaries of rigid definition, but sometimes, it still needs a container.

At Ranch Ehrlo, budding artists have made art on CD covers and skateboards and contained their art in glass jars, much like the preserved fruit some of their grandmothers made years ago.

This innovative approach to art and education took place under the guidance of Amanda Scandrett, who is spending a year as artist-in-residence at the centre, which houses at-risk youth from across the country.

Vocational coordinator Monica Rivers says Scandrett has brought a new dimension to the range of treatment available at the Regina-based centre.

An arts education graduate of the University of Regina, Scandrett worked in Kelowna as a community and education co-ordinator before returning to Regina to take up her Ranch Ehrlo post. Her past involvement with Kelowna's Alternator Gallery led to the first show by her new students, a sense of my Self, an installation involving more than a hundred shiny glass jars, each one containing bits and pieces that the kids felt represented them.

The installation was on display at the Kelowna gallery for more than a month in spring 2008. Now, Scandrett is trying to find a venue for a Regina show.

Rivers says the idea of having an artist-in-residence arose after residents at the centre expressed a desire for more cultural programming.

The artist works with a variety of kids (there are 265 residents at Ranch Ehrlo in facilities in and around Regina) in a variety of media. "There's no preconceived end project," Rivers says. "They could be painting a skateboard or making CD covers. I like it because it's so individualized."

A separate ArtsSmarts grant brought hip hop musicians InfoRed and Merky Waters into classrooms to help the kids create a recording. Scandrett worked with the students to create 250 individual artworks for the CD covers. A CD release party was held at Regina's The Exchange nightclub in May 2008.

Later in the summer, local hip hop artist Danny Fernandez (Def 3), also an avid skateboarder and graffiti artist, delivered week-long skateboarding workshops, working with Scandrett to help the students create and paint their own skateboard designs.

Rivers says Ranch Ehrlo is happy with the way the program has been going. Scandrett has "demonstrated the value that art can bring to the quality of life for these kids."

Finding their inner artists

Whether you want to become a professional actor, hone your stage skills or just have some fun, there's something for everyone at the Globe Theatre School.

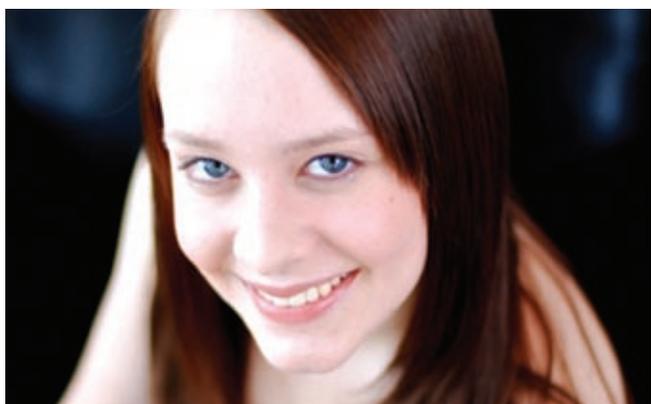

While the Actor Conservatory Training Program (see page 2) trains artists for the stage, other Globe Theatre School programs help actors find the artists within themselves. Globe-On-The-Road, a provincial outreach workshop program, is aimed at schools and community theatre groups, and several other programs are available for kids and adults.

The theatre school has been running since July 2006 and has already had 500 students. Tuition costs are kept relatively low through financial support to the Globe Theatre from the Saskatchewan Arts Board and other granting agencies. As the school's co-ordinator Jayden Pfeifer says, this support "provides the opportunity for the Globe to make it happen."

Actor Skye Brandon and writer Holly Luhning share their opinions on the Arts Board's future with Executive Director Jeremy Morgan during a recent Young Artists Advisory Panel meeting.

Giving students a boost

Heather Wilson began playing violin at the tender age of four. Almost 20 years later, the Saskatoon resident is still playing, though she's switched to the viola. She's performed with the Saskatoon Symphony Orchestra, the National Youth Orchestra of Canada, the Prairie Virtuosi Chamber Orchestra and the Saskatoon Opera, and has just earned her bachelor's degree in music from McGill University.

Krishia McLaren is a young dancer from Drake, a town in central Saskatchewan. She is studying at the Royal Winnipeg Ballet School.

Both McLaren and Wilson were perfect candidates to receive one of the Premier's Centennial Arts Scholarships, which debuted in 2007. They joined 20 other young Saskatchewan artists – dancers, musicians, writers, and visual, theatre and media artists – pursuing their dreams at schools in Canada, the U.S. and as far away as New Zealand.

The scholarships range from $500 to $2,500, and when you're a student, every dollar counts. Attending her ballet school "is expensive and any amount of money would help me in pursuing my dreams," says McLaren.

The scholarship, adds Wilson in a letter to the Arts Board, "has given me a real boost. Thank you for the encouragement."

In 2007, the Premier's Centennial Scholarship program provided $34,000 to students in the arts.

Shaping the Arts Board's future

In June 2007, the Saskatchewan Arts Board partnered with the Canada Council for the Arts for the Next Generation of Artistic Leaders Dialogues. This nation-wide consultation was part of the Canada Council's 50th anniversary celebrations and plan for the future. Fourteen young artists and arts professionals took part in the session held in Saskatoon. Some of the topics included economic sustainability, financial pressures of working in the arts sector, retaining Saskatchewan artists, mentorship and professional development, and relationships with funding agencies.

At the same time, the Arts Board began its own consultations through its Young Artists Advisory Panel. While the Next Generation Dialogues brought artists together for one day, the Young Artists Advisory Panel is part of an ongoing process to ensure the agency's programs and services serve the aspirations and needs of young artists. Consultations with the panel will play an important role in the renewal of the Arts Board's strategic plan.

Members of the 2007 Young Artists Advisory Panel were: Skye Brandon, Johanna Bundon, Wally Dion, Lee Henderson, Lindsay Knight, Holly Luhning, Jeff Nye and Nisha Rocamora. In addition to these, participants in the Next Generation Dialogues included Dustin Browne, Kristi Friday, Megan Hazel, Damon Badger Heit, Amanda Murray, Crystal Sikma and Amy Thibodeau.

Innovation and ^{NEW} technology

The bandwidth boom

The Internet is a brave new world for artists. It allows them to get up close and personal with audiences, receive instant feedback, and keep up with artistic and business contacts and promotional opportunities. And that's not even mentioning the way art itself can be created, manipulated and transmitted via the Net.

Two Saskatchewan artists using the Internet in a bid to go global are Regina's Danny Fernandez, known to his fans as Def 3, and Saskatoon's Lindsay Knight, aka Eekwol.

Knight has several songs up on her MySpace page, where they've been played more than 40,000 times. On a recent tour of Japan, Fernandez was amazed to discover some fans who already knew the lyrics to one of his songs, after listening to it online.

Knight and Fernandez are examples of the spread and reach of hip hop. In fact, both are taking the genre in new directions. Eekwol used her recent Saskatchewan Arts Board grant to infuse a Cree sensibility into her music. Def 3 used his to finance a multicultural album that mixes his Latin-infused hip hop with the music of other artists, like Saskatchewan's Joël Fafard, Eileen Laverty, Sylvie and Eekwol, for a blend of folk, jazz, rock and rap.

"I couldn't have made this album without the Arts Board grant," Fernandez says. He recalls how surprised he was to get a grant. Until hearing about them from an acquaintance, "I didn't even know about grants, and definitely not that people in hip hop were eligible," he says.

Fernandez' career is burgeoning. He has been the resident DJ at two Regina bars, and played the Cathedral Village Arts Festival and the Lieutenant Governor's Awards Gala. His music has made it onto the soundtracks of National Film Board films and the popular TV show, renegadepruss.com.

The value of the Internet as a marketing tool, Fernandez points out, is that "anyone can access it, anywhere in the world. It makes promotion easy."

Knight also uses the Internet to market her music (see page 7), but her Arts Board grant was a bit more low-tech. She wanted to research Cree drumming, music and language, with an eye to incorporating it into her own music. It turned out to be more complex than she first thought. "I found out there's a spiritual connection to Cree music, so it's not something you can throw together for entertainment purposes," she says.

She is incorporating some Cree language into her songs, though. Like many Plains Cree who have grown up in cities, she and her family had lost their language and much of their culture. Through her music, she's hoping "to make Cree language and culture cool."

New ways of promoting books

Pam Bustin got her feet wet in cyberspace when it came to promoting her book, Mostly Happy. The book, and the reading tour she put together to launch it into the world, were promoted on MySpace, Facebook and YouTube, three of the most popular interactive websites.

Bustin was a rookie when it came to self-promotion. The experienced playwright admits to having done next to nothing to promote her plays. "I wrote them, I guess I thought that was enough," she says now, with a laugh. But after labouring for six years over her first novel, she felt she needed to get personally involved in selling it. "I wrote the book as well as I could, so I felt I just had to try to promote it as well as I could, too."

The promotional effort became all-consuming, ironically so, because Bustin had resisted joining Facebook, "because I didn't want it to devour all my time."

Including the 12-event cross-country reading tour (via Greyhound) she undertook, the promotion of Mostly Happy took three months.

On Facebook, Bustin got her own page and another for her novel, which has drawn over 2,000 page views. Viewers get to see the itinerary of her tour, excerpts from the novel, pictures, and even two brief videos she made. She also has a MySpace page (300 visitors) and uploaded the videos to YouTube, where they've been seen by about 200 people.

At her 12 readings and signings, Bustin attracted a combined crowd of more than 200 people, many of whom bought books.

Although she will never know the effect her Internet efforts made on her book sales, she thinks they were worth it. "I just felt I had to do it, and I'm glad I did."

Bustin, who has started work on a new play, is extremely appreciative of the support she received from the Saskatchewan Arts Board during the writing of her novel. She received two grants: one at the start of the writing process, and another near the end, as well as a Canada Council grant in the middle. She admits she probably would have gotten the novel done without that support, but doesn't want to think how many years it might have added to the process if she'd juggled a job with her writing. "This was the first time in my life I could just write," she says of the grants.

Pedaling art all over

Reginan Michael Flaherty is a spokesman for a new way of thinking about art.

Literally.

Michael Flaherty repairs bicycles in art galleries as part of his Bicycle Rehabilitation Project.

While many artists use more traditional materials to create their art, Flaherty makes his out of bicycle wheels, and not in the sculptural sense. Instead, he rides bikes, repairs them and uses them as a medium to create performance art.

The Newfoundland-born Flaherty, whose regular art practice is as a ceramicist, spent the summer of 2007 biking across Canada and the northern U.S., with numerous stops at galleries along the way for shows and talks. And bike tune-ups. Over the summer, he pedaled 7,000 kilometres and repaired more than 200 bikes, without taking a penny from their owners. He refers to the bike-repair stints as "art auctions."

Flaherty considers his entire interdisciplinary project, dubbed the Bicycle Rehabilitation Project, a work of art in motion. The project functioned somewhere between a documentary and a diary. By stopping at galleries and fixing people's bikes, he built an audience for the performance/documentary/diary and the underlying content – environmental activism. He received a New Media Initiatives Grant from the Saskatchewan Arts Board to get pedaling on the project.

"I had decided I was going to go ahead with the project no matter what, and that I would just go as far as I could on what I had. I got the grant the day before I left, and soon learned that I wouldn't have made it far without it. Even more importantly, I was able to do the project properly."

The idea behind Flaherty's performance art project was political. The 30-year-old artist has given up on automobiles and thinks others should, too. In the tradition of performance art, Flaherty made himself and his art visible in the daily lives of his "audience." His public display of cycling was a way of "intervening in the habits that drivers have," he says. "It has these performative qualities and intervention qualities, because these people have no choice but to confront the fact that they're burning gasoline to get where they have to go, and you're not."

The artist's website (www.bicyclerehabilitationproject.com) was an integral part of the project. His site documents the project with photos, a blog and Google Earth tours, which he considers the most innovative thing he did with the website. It allowed people to "virtually zoom right along with me as I bicycled across the continent. It was not just showing art on the Internet, but using the Internet as an artistic medium in its own right."

The website was also a way for people to interact with him and the project from anywhere in the world.

However, Flaherty's main focus in the performance piece was the performance itself. "I would be out there on the road [on my bike] with hundreds of other travelers. They might not have known that I was doing an art project, but nonetheless the effect was the same. They would be confronted with a situation that might have been a little out of the ordinary and have to resolve what they were seeing with what they were used to seeing.

"If I forced even a few people to reconsider their assumptions about the world, then I think I was successful. Any other intervention artist or performance artist would be happy to have such an extensive audience."

Creative Connections

A family of beautiful things

Students at Maverick School in Swift Current are using art to create a new identity for their school.

In 2007, Maverick School received an ArtsSmarts grant to hire two singer/songwriters, Dave Lang and Carrie Catherine Horachek (who performs under the name Carrie Catherine), to help students write and record a song. The grant also allowed the school to hire local filmmaker Reg Penna to assist with producing a music video. The project culminated with Maverick School's annual coffee house and art auction in the historic Lyric Theatre, an event that showcased the final song and video as well as student pottery and paintings.

"I think these arts programs take a lot of bravery on the kids' part," says Horachek. "They're learning how to share themselves, and I could see how that process brought them closer together."

"We don't have an educated arts teacher at our school," says Principal Jayne Nicholson. "We're all learning right beside the kids so we have to bring in professional artists to give them quality instruction in areas like these."

In the past few years, Nicholson has seen first-hand the benefits of the ArtsSmarts grants, including increased self-esteem among the students and improved student retention.

Defined in its vision statement as "an ever-evolving school for highly independent youth," Maverick is student-driven and flexible. Every year, the students set the rules for the school, whose motto is Freedom Equals Responsibility, and every year, the students make a commitment to music and the arts. "These are things that students believe need to exist at Maverick," says Nicholson.

With 90 per cent student participation, the annual coffee house and art auction is an opportunity for Maverick students to show their community what they're all about. As a result, Nicholson believes the community is starting to see Maverick School in a new light.

According to Nicholson, there was a period when the school had a negative reputation, but that perception is changing.

"[People in the community] realize these kids aren't the bad kids," says Nicholson. "These are kids who think outside the box. They're highly independent, they're very creative, and they're very bright."

Horachek says the project is not just about songwriting. "It's about who they are as people. One of the lines of the songs is 'We are a family of beautiful things' and sure, the package is a hard rock punk song, but the lyrics really attest to the fact that they came together and decided what they wanted to share."

The school plans to continue working with filmmaker Penna to create a documentary about Maverick School. Students are already anticipating next year's showcase.

Taking the Prairies on the road

In addition to her work with Maverick School, Horachek received an Independent Artists Grant to write songs for a one-hour live performance that explores and defines the genre of "green-eyed soul."

She collaborated with artists in various disciplines to develop a performance that reflects her Prairie roots. Mark Eriksson, set designer for the Saskatchewan Native Theatre Company, designed and built a farm window frame with curtains. Projected on the window are scenes of Prairie landscape taken from Graeme Patterson's work, Woodrow.

"Being able to tap into the way a visual artist thinks or the way a drama person perceives body movements on stage helped me refine all those details that are secondary for a songwriter but equally as important when it comes to relating to an audience," she says.

Since developing her live show, Horachek has noticed a significant difference in how audiences respond to her performances. Before, they commented on her voice or a song they liked, but now, more people say her show is the best they've seen.

"I really believe the grant was responsible for taking my art and my career to the next level," she says.

Recently, Horachek toured nation-wide, bringing her Prairie set with her. "[The audience members] were so enthusiastic about being returned to the Prairies during the course of this show, and those who weren't familiar with the Prairies were equally open, because I think the themes about identity and being connected to the land really translate to a lot of communities in Canada," she says.

From the supernatural to the natural

Regina artist Gerri Ann Siwek worked with students during Agribition to help them make the connection between art and agriculture (see page 4). But this wasn't the first time she's served in a teaching role.

"I am involved in a lot of art education these days – teaching children, adults and seniors. I learn as I teach, and teaching has influenced my own work. There is a distinct connection to the environment, the landscape and a sense of place happening here. The EnviroArt mural project fit nicely into that mix," she says.

In the past, Siwek has been intrigued with "making artwork that is more than natural or normal." Some examples include her installations, My Astral Travels and the Funomena Mobile Museum of the Weird and Strange. However, her current work has moved away from the paranormal and closer to nature, "with just a bit of the supernatural present," she says. Siwek's current series of paintings explore the supernatural connection between botany and the body.

With a better live performance and increased confidence, Horachek has raised her performance fees, secured a new manager and attracted more sponsors. Concentrating on professional development continues to help her improve the quality of her work.

She says, “I’ve raised my own ambition tremendously, and it’s because of the support of the Saskatchewan Arts Board that I’ve been able to dream bigger, to fulfill those dreams, and to be sustainable as an artist. I’m very, very grateful for being in a province that supports its artists that way.”

Horachek and her husband, Curtis Olson, transfer that support to other independent artists by hosting concerts in their Saskatoon home. “It’s our way of giving back, because the concerts really make people aware of the importance of art and culture.” They plan to host more in their new home—an abandoned confectionary converted into a living space and concert venue, incorporating Prairie architecture for inspiration.

Airplanes and art

Military and art don’t seem like an obvious connection, but playwright Courtney Siebring found a creative way to bring the two together. Drawing on her own experience as a military spouse, Siebring explored universal themes of loneliness and isolation in her play, Conversations with Airplanes. In doing so, she debunked a few myths about military life and brought a community together.

“I was really curious to know where people lived in more of an emotional way,” says Siebring, who had been living in Bushell Park, a community next to Canadian Forces Base Moose Jaw (15 Wing) where her husband was a pilot-in-training.

“I was placed in an environment where my impression of it initially was roaring engines and uniformity and a pretty sterile environment,” she says. “There’s a definite system put in place but the people in that system are still people, and I wanted to get at the humanity behind all of that.”

With an Independent Artists Grant from the Saskatchewan Arts Board, Siebring set out to write, direct and perform a comedic play that discusses serious issues affecting military spouses at 15 Wing.

“The grant allowed me the freedom to focus on the show,” says Siebring. “It took the financial pressure off my shoulders, and I was really able to create from a place of joy, which, to be honest, I hadn’t been able to do in a long time. It’s a project that’s really close to my heart.”

The script was based on the responses to a survey Siebring distributed to the community, as well as her own experiences and observations.

Several military spouses who attended the play overwhelmingly identified with the play’s themes. One woman said, “I’ve been a military wife for 23 years, and you’ve finally put into words what I’ve been feeling.”

The grant allowed Siebring to involve the 15 Wing community in nearly every aspect of the play. From the actors to the sound designer, Conversations with Airplanes involved military spouses, a military police officer, a student pilot and the Military Family Resource Centre, which now carries a DVD copy of the performance. Siebring also hosted a series of workshops for military spouses on the base to explore themes of loneliness and the risk involved in developing new relationships.

“So many people were empowered by their involvement in the show directly, and many more were empowered by seeing their lives acted out on stage,” says Siebring, adding that the play reached an audience that may not typically experience live theatre, since it was performed on the base.

The play was so successful that Siebring, who now lives in Nova Scotia, will return to Saskatchewan in July 2008 for three additional performances, including one at the Regina Fringe Festival.

Eating and writing locally

Growing up on a farm at Craik, Saskatchewan, Amy Jo Ehman has always had an appreciation for locally produced food. Reflecting on her childhood, she says, “We had a big garden, raised our own chickens and pigs, canned fruit and jams, and generally made due with what we had...we ate locally, in season, with a sense of pride and in honest good taste.”

Inspired by Gary Nabham’s book on eating locally, Ehman decided in 2005 that she would set out to eat Saskatchewan foods exclusively for one year.

At first, she wondered what she and her husband would eat: “Was it going to be meat and potatoes and rhubarb pie for a whole year?” To her surprise, Ehman discovered that many traditional dishes from around the world are made with ingredients grown in Saskatchewan, including spices such as fennel and cumin.

(now known as the Independent Artists Grant program) in 2006 to write about her adventure in a creative non-fiction collection of essays that became a draft manuscript for a book.

“The fact that I would get an arts grant to write about this said to me it’s not just something that I’m doing for myself; it’s something I’m doing to inform the wider community,” she said.

A freelance journalist and former CBC reporter, Ehman hoped the grant would assist her in making a career shift toward literary non-fiction, “stretching [her] journalistic skills into creative story telling.”

Her project is not meant to preach but to tell the quirky tales of the places she visited and to capture the spirit of her adventure in rural Saskatchewan. In doing so, she hopes “to encourage more people to consider the impact and pleasures of local food consumption.”

“The fact that I would get an arts grant to write about this said to me it’s not just something that I’m doing for myself; it’s something I’m doing to inform the wider community,”

“Eating locally doesn’t have to be a boring prospect,” says Ehman. “We have such a variety of foods being produced here that you can do many wonderful things with them. I tried really hard during the course of the year to be really experimental with the foods that I cooked at home.”

Ehman traveled across the province in search of local food sources, encountering some passionate and interesting characters along the way. She also discovered that a range of social, economic, health and environmental benefits accompanied her new Saskatchewan diet.

Wanting to share her journey with others through “humour and gentle advocacy,” Ehman received an Individual Assistance Grant

Since receiving the grant, Ehman has achieved the following career milestones: a one-year extension of her food column, Home for Dinner, in The StarPhoenix; a new monthly food column on CBC Radio, called Home on the Range; a local food cooking series on the CBC TV program Living Saskatchewan; and a reputation as a speaker on local food and food sustainability. Ehman also pitched the book project to publishers.

“I just love that whole adventure of discovering the source of my food and really knowing where it comes from,” says Ehman, who continues to eat locally. “I found it so rewarding to really engage with the agricultural community of Saskatchewan and learn about it and buy directly from the people who were producing my food.”

Celebrating 60 years

The Saskatchewan Arts Board has a lot of celebrating to do this year as well. February 2, 2008 marked the 60th anniversary of the agency’s establishment and the kick-off of a year of celebrations that will take place around the province throughout 2008-09.

The first event was held in partnership with the University of Regina’s Heritage Lecture Series on February 6. The presentation celebrated the Arts Board’s long history and its future. Sheila Roberts, arts activist and daughter of Arts Board founder David Charlton Smith, and artist and former employee David Thauberger painted a picture of the agency’s first six decades, while Jeremy Morgan, current executive director, presented a vision for the future.

Roberts says the foundation of the Arts Board “was an ultimate faith in human creativity, that the unique resources of the community and each person gave distinction and direction to life.”

Award-winning art teacher

Monique Martin got the idea for an award-winning art project while living in Paris. She noticed bus shelters were named after people, places and events from French history. “I learned an awful lot just by waiting for the bus,” she recalls.

A few years later, while Martin juggled her own art career with part-time teaching at Georges Vanier Catholic School in Saskatoon, she conceived the “Stops with History” project, which involved 63 Grades 7 and 8 students in creating 22 posters to be displayed on shelters throughout the Saskatoon Transit System.

An ArtsSmarts grant enabled Martin to hire graphic artist Kevin Vindeg to work with the students on the posters and poet Jeanette Montgomery to help the students craft the ad text. Other artists donated time, and the City of Saskatoon, Rawlco Transit and several graphic design and advertising firms jumped on board as sponsors.

The project got off to a public start when most of the posters were installed on a bus and passengers were invited to “take a ride with history.” Subjects varied from the Saskatoon Exhibition to the Western Development Museum to favourite son John Diefenbaker.

The success of the project was recognized on a national scale when Martin won a Governor General’s Award for Excellence in Teaching Canadian History from Canada’s History Society. Only six such awards are presented annually.

The project “connected art and history in a unique way,” Martin says. Students researched local history at the public library, and archivists from the city, University of Saskatchewan, The StarPhoenix and elsewhere pitched in to help; in all, 25 people from the community were involved in the research.

Although Martin is an art teacher, the project was as much about history as it was about art.

“The project was extremely valuable because people going about their daily lives learned a little about Saskatoon history that they might not have known before,” Martin says. “I think it was wonderful to be on a bus that was not filled with advertising trying to sell you something but rather information that allowed you to learn something.”

Martin credits the ArtsSmarts grant with getting the ball rolling. “It took the effort of literally hundreds of people to make the project happen, but without the money from the Arts Board, the bus would never have left the stop, so to speak.”

Passing a theatrical torch

Saskatoon's Persephone Theatre has seen a lot of change in the past year.

The theatre's long-time artistic director, Tibor Feheregyhazi, passed away at the age of 75 after a lengthy illness. Feheregyhazi was passionate about theatre in general and Persephone in particular. "His excitement and passion for what he did was infectious," Persephone General Manager Sheldon Born said of his colleague.

Feheregyhazi's successor, Saskatchewan-born and raised Del Surjik, was appointed artistic director a few months later, stepping into impossibly large shoes but taking some confident steps on his own.

In between, Persephone moved into a new $11-million, 3,251-square-metre building at the new River Landing development. The theatre was previously housed in a converted church.

With Surjik's hand on the tiller, the new Persephone had its first production, a glittering Beauty and the Beast late in 2007, and by spring 2008, an ambitious 15-play season was announced.

And then there were the gifts: $1.5 million from Saskatoon businesswoman Ellen Remai and $340,000 in partial matching dollars from the Department of Canadian Heritage, which pushed Persephone's endowment fund to a total of $2.3 million.

This was on top of regular financial support of almost $200,000 a year from the Saskatchewan Arts Board's Global Grants program. There are 40 organizations in the province that benefit from these grants, which help pay salaries, bills and other operating costs associated with bringing the arts to Saskatchewan people.

Surjik describes Persephone as Canadian theatre history in the making. "This is a company that is national in scope and has genuinely made our world better," he told The StarPhoenix when he was announced as artistic director.

Acknowledging the groundbreaking work of his predecessor, Surjik says, "Tibor was a friend and I look forward to building on his legacy and taking us to a very exciting future, which is what I'm sure he wanted."

Modern and traditional

Some of his most striking work combines modern technology with traditional craft. Inspired by an interest in found materials, Dion constructs flat sculptures in the shape and design of traditional First Nations star blankets, out of recycled computer circuit boards.

Used whole or cut into triangles, painted in various bright colours and cinched together by brass and copper wire into six-foot squares, the fragments of electronic circuitry take on new life as they're fitted together, jigsaw puzzle style, in designs inspired by the quilting and beadwork of generations of Plains Indian women.

Dion had his first solo show in 2006 at Saskatoon's AKA Gallery, and he's been involved in several group shows, including a major solo show at Regina's MacKenzie Art Gallery in June 2008. Some of his pieces have been bought for public collections, including those of the Saskatchewan Arts Board and the Canadian Museum of Civilization.

Raum's passion

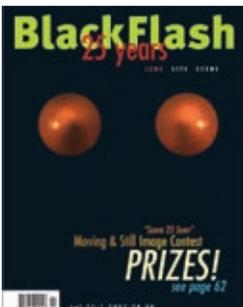

Composer Elizabeth Raum

Renowned Regina composer Elizabeth Raum had the challenge and pleasure of writing new music for a classic tale this year, when she was commissioned to compose the score for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet's touring production, Carmen, The Passion. It is based on Prosper Mérimée's Carmen, immortalized by Georges Bizet in one of the most popular operas of all time.

André Lewis, artistic director of the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, says, "It was exciting to have a Canadian write an original score for us... the reaction [to the new music] has been extremely positive."

25 great years and counting

It was an exciting year for BlackFlash magazine. The Saskatoon-published photography magazine, recognized as one of the best of its kind in Canada, took home four awards at the 2007 Western Magazine Awards, including Saskatchewan Magazine of the Year. It was nominated for the same award in 2008, which happens to be its 25th anniversary.

The magazine was also singled out by another magazine, Air Canada's EnRoute, as recommended reading for anyone interested in photography, calling BlackFlash "The home for lens-based and new media arts, including photography and film."

Lissa Robinson, BlackFlash's editor, says its "continued success as Canada's oldest and most-respected photographic art magazines is truly a monument to the Saskatchewan Arts Board. The Arts Board's commitment to elevating the arts in Saskatchewan and nationally is to be commended. Bravo!"

Raum was also excited about the opportunity. "I've played in the pit for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet before, and it is a world-class company." It wasn't an easy task, though. "I had to orchestrate it for duo piano, full orchestra and chamber orchestra. It was a huge amount of work," she says. She spent two years working on the score, which is influenced by Andalusian music, and uses a lot of percussion and strings.

In the end, the hard work paid off; the reviews for the performance and the score itself were glowing.

The Globe and Mail said, "Raum has fashioned a tremendously enjoyable piece of Spanish-influenced music, almost cinematic in its lush depiction of mood and place."

Raum is currently principal oboist for the Regina Symphony Orchestra, an organization supported by the Arts Board's Global Grant program. The orchestra will play the Overture from Carmen, The Passion in a concert in April 2009 called Raum at the Top, where Raum's daughter, Erika, will also be featured as a guest artist on violin.

A prolific composer, Raum has a reputation as one of Canada's most "accessible" composers, writing for varied media and in diverse styles. Her latest commission was a regionally inspired piece for the St. Lawrence String Quartet, on the theme of the Bushwakker Brewpub in Regina.

Quality of Life

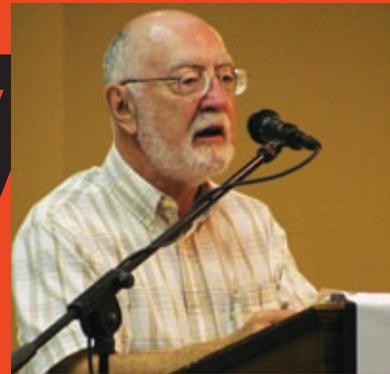

A spokesperson for the arts

Bob Currie, who became Saskatchewan's third poet laureate in 2007, had a leg up when he was appointed to this prestigious position; he and his friend, Gary Hyland, had been poets laureate of Moose Jaw for years.

Supported by funding from the Saskatchewan Arts Board and administered by the Saskatchewan Writers Guild, the poet laureate is not only the province's most visible poet, but also a spokesperson for the arts in general.

"The arts help us see both our inner and our outer worlds," Currie told the annual congress of the Saskatchewan Arts Alliance this spring. "They help us comprehend their meaning, and what's more important, feel what's significant about them, that is, deal with them on an emotional level. I believe that the arts allow us to share the emotional impact of events, and in many cases that's where the meaning lies."

Through dozens of appearances at schools, libraries, churches, town halls, retirement centres, convention meeting rooms and banquet halls, as well as Government House, Currie has brought poetry to a lot of people who "haven't heard or thought of it since high school, people who've never been to a reading," he says.

And not once, Currie adds with a grin, has he been told to take his poetry elsewhere, “though maybe some high school kids might have been thinking that.”

He describes his job as, “reminding people that poetry matters, that it can still stir our emotions.”

Currie has been stirring emotions and imaginations for years, having been at the centre of literary activity in his home province for more than four decades.

The Lloydminster native, now in his late 60s and retired from many years as a beloved Moose Jaw high school English teacher, has been writing fiction and poetry most of his life. He began publishing his work in the mid-1960s and has produced five full-length poetry titles, four chapbooks, two story collections and a novel. He was editor/publisher of the literary magazine Salt for seven years and was a founder of Coteau Books, now one of the country’s leading literary presses.

Along the way, he was president of the Saskatchewan Writers Guild (SWG), serving on several of its committees, taught fiction and poetry at both the Saskatchewan Summer School of the Arts at Fort San and its successor, the Sage Hill Writing Experience, and, for the last dozen years, has been an active member of the board of Moose Jaw’s Living Skies Festival of Words. His writing has won a number of awards, and he’s been honoured twice by the SWG for his devoted service.

Being poet laureate is the culmination of his writing career, and the responsibility that comes with the title is one Currie takes seriously.

Currie told the Regina Leader-Post in 2007, “I think having a poet laureate is recognizing the value of poetry, the value of what poetry can do, and that’s why it’s important.”

Bringing art out of the studio

First there was garage rock. Now...garage art!

The Garage Show was the work of the Regina-based artists’ collective Lane Level Projects, dedicated to bringing art out of the studio and into people’s homes, garages, yards and gardens.

One of the inspirations for the show was Regina’s Secret Spaces: Love and Lore of Local Geography, a book published in 2006 that celebrated many of the Queen City’s byways and hidden gems.

Jeff Nye, an organizer of the show, says, “the book cultivated thoughtful and sometimes poetic responses to places in the city that would normally have been overlooked.” He and colleague Sheila Nourse “have both used mundane objects and places as subjects of our work. We felt that the alleys and garages of the Cathedral neighbourhood could offer a rich potential for similar poetic responses by the emerging visual artists that we had in mind for The Garage Show.”

On September 8, 2007, a dozen Cathedral-area garages were taken over by artists who converted them into studios for the day and began to create and display works of art.

“Our secondary goal was to engage an unexpected audience in an innovative art event,” Nye reveals, “to provide an opportunity for contemporary artists and a community to come together

Turning your office into a gallery

If your office is looking a little drab and uninspiring, you can bring it alive with some Saskatchewan art, at a very reasonable price.

The Saskatchewan Arts Board’s art rental service taps into the Permanent Collection to make hundreds of paintings, sculptures and other art works available to turn an ordinary place of business into an art gallery.

Currently there are almost 50 clients, including government departments, agencies, Crown corporations, boards, non-profits, and private businesses. A number of art galleries around the province also have work from the Permanent Collection on loan.

outside of the normal gallery structures.”

Nye says the grant from the Arts Board allowed emerging artists' work not only to be showcased but also recognized with artists' fees.

“It also gave all kinds of people an opportunity to mingle as neighbours, to discover unexpected beauty and meaning in their backyards, and to realize the magic potential of art to enrich the everyday,” he says.

The show gave Lane Level Projects a kick start for other projects.

“If you saw the calibre of work that came out of The Garage Show and the crowds of people wandering around the neighbourhood in search of the next artwork, you would know that the people of Saskatchewan got more than their money's worth,” Nye says. “A modest $5,000 grant went a long way to allow us to reach a large audience, and the results of the project are still being felt.”

Nourse and Nye themselves felt the effect months later – the pair were winners of the 2008 Innovation in the Arts Award at the Regina Mayor's Arts and Business Awards.

Spreading the art around

Launch Time (see page 5) is just one example of how the Arts Board spreads art around to enhance the quality of life in Saskatchewan. Another is On Hallowed Ground, a traveling exhibition of art compiled from the Arts Board's Permanent Collection by preparator Aaron Clarke and sponsored by the Organization of Saskatchewan Arts Councils.

The show is mostly a collection of landscapes, with a spiritual bent. As critic Jack Anderson noted in his review for the Regina Leader-Post, the “sensitively curated” exhibit presents some of the Permanent Collection's works “within notions of a shared sense of the physicality and spirituality of this place.”

“These are not the works of religions or churches, but rather of the resting place of the studio, where artists work in solitude,” curator Clarke explains. The works present “an invisible source of inspiration made visible.”

The 15 artists represented in the show range from masters like Ernest Lindner to 70s Regina Five abstractionist Art McKay to contemporary Aboriginal artist Dennis Bruce.

The Arts Board's Permanent Collection is the largest collection of work by Saskatchewan artists in the world. Begun in 1950 to preserve the history of contemporary visual art practices in the province and ensure public access, the Permanent Collection contains more than 2,600 works by almost 600 artists from across Saskatchewan.

On Hallowed Ground began its tour in February 2008 in Shaunavon, then went on to Regina Beach, Kipling and Fort Qu'Appelle. It continues through 2008 in Bengough, the Battlefords, La Ronge and Prince Albert. In 2009, the show will appear in Watrous, Canora, Rosthern, Assiniboia, Weyburn, Estevan and Melfort, with at least two other locations to be added.

Having a piece of Saskatchewan art in the office can make all the difference to your work environment. “Arts Board staff helped us choose beautiful art that has transformed our dreary boardroom into a lively, vibrant space,” says Barbara Shourounis of Saskatchewan Financial Services Commission.

Says Timothy F. Huber of the Law Society of Saskatchewan, “The Saskatchewan Arts Board and its art rental program made it possible for us to improve our space and enjoy quality art from Saskatchewan artists in a very economical way. The transformation of our space was impressive.”

Art not only improves the workplace for workers, but also for clients, according to Pat Horning of Assante Financial Ltd. “Not only have we been pleased with the artwork, but, more importantly, our clients have been impressed with the space, the artwork and how it all ties together. Diana [Chabros, Outreach Co-ordinator] has been very helpful in suggesting works and has been very concerned about the right fit,” she says.

Art rental is just one of the ways the Saskatchewan Arts Board is working to make the Permanent Collection accessible to the people of Saskatchewan.

Report on ends statements

The Saskatchewan Arts Board has four “ends statements” that inform all that we do. The significant changes in the Arts Board’s environment this year have had a major impact on our ability to address the action steps proposed in last year’s annual report. Actions in 2008-09 will depend, to some extent, on the provincial government’s policy development process and immediate outcomes. These initiatives represent only a portion of the Arts Board’s activities but do indicate the progress the agency is making towards its ends.

End #1: Saskatchewan people engage in the arts in all their diversity

Action	Rationale	Progress to date	Next Steps
Develop a comprehensive strategy for the arts in rural Saskatchewan	The significant opportunities for artists and audiences in rural Saskatchewan can be developed more effectively through a comprehensive strategic approach.	Discussions on regional arts and culture development and renewed partnership with SaskCulture to facilitate initiatives.	Participation in provincial policy dialogue, ongoing partnership activity with SaskCulture and 8-10 community meetings as part of the Arts Board’s strategic renewal. Increased support for the Artists in the Community program.
Conduct a review of the Project Assistance Grant program	The program will adapt to address changes in the province’s art ecosystem over the last decade.	Organizational program review needs to be completed before finalizing the Project Assistance review.	Complete organizational program review and assessment of the impact of proposed provincial policy prior to finalizing scope and resourcing of Project Assistance Grant program.
Develop a provincial strategy for arts and learning	Engagement of artists, youth and teachers in public schools is a major vehicle for advancing the arts in Saskatchewan.	Convened arts educators and artists to discuss provincial network and strategy for arts and learning; developed additional funding sources for ArtsSmarts Saskatchewan.	Increase ArtsSmarts activity and continue provincial network and strategy process; pilot an assessment of the impact on program participants.

End #2: The people of Saskatchewan support their artists

Action	Rationale	Progress to date	Next Steps
Respond to the recommendations of the Status of the Artist Report	Many of the report’s recommendations outline opportunities for artists and audiences that speak directly to Arts Board’s ends.	Allocation of increased funds from the General Revenue Fund on a one-time basis. 2007-08 operating budget to implement Business Plan priorities.	Develop and implement an agenda for creative industries development. Discussions with Ministry about immediate needs of the sector. Participation in provincial policy dialogue.
Provide a comprehensive picture of the funding needs of the arts sector	A complete picture of the sector will enrich policy making and inform decisions about resource allocation.	Partnership with Saskatchewan Institute of Public Policy (SIPP), resulting in a paper on cultural policy.	Participation in provincial policy dialogue. Contribute to an understanding of the cultural ecosystem in Saskatchewan, which will assist in the province’s policy process. Develop an updated picture of the needs of young artists as well as arts organizations.
Promote the work of Saskatchewan artists through a range of partnership programs	Partnerships extend the effectiveness of the agency and strengthen the promotion of Saskatchewan artists’ work.	Ongoing collaborations with Organization of Saskatchewan Arts Councils, SaskCulture, provincial Poet Laureate, City of Saskatoon and University of Saskatchewan.	Continue current projects; participation in Saskatchewan role in Vancouver Olympics Cultural Olympiad; develop proposed Saskatchewan presence at Harbourfront Centre 2009.

End #3: Saskatchewan people champion the arts as vital to a healthy society

Action	Rationale	Progress to date	Next Steps
Collaborate with SIPP in the development of arts policy	Provincial arts policy provides a shared basis for resource allocation, program development and performance assessment.	Collaborated with SIPP on the production of the background paper released in early 2008.	Participation in provincial policy dialogue.
Partner with the City of Saskatoon in a number of its Cultural Capitals projects	The partnership is a unique opportunity to showcase and advance the arts in the province's largest urban centre.	Three projects continued in 2007 and were completed as planned.	Present The Creative City television series in partnership with the University of Saskatchewan, SCN and SaskCulture. Continue involvement in Creative City Round Table.
Develop plans and partnerships for the Arts Board's 60th anniversary	The 60th anniversary will highlight the importance of the arts to Saskatchewan people and the province's unique and pioneering history of public support for the arts.	Finalize plan for 2008-09 anniversary activities including Strategic Plan renewal and community outreach.	Extensive community outreach focusing on the Arts Board's contribution to the province's culture, its current activity and the community's ideas for the agency's future, culminating in a new Strategic Plan by March 31, 2009.

End #4: The Arts Board is a strong, flexible leadership organization

Action	Rationale	Progress to date	Next Steps
Continue to develop the Arts Board as a one-stop agency and focus on provincial arts funding, policy and support.	The Arts Board continues to develop into an integrated agency for the arts and creative industries.	Agreement in principle to a new partnership with SaskCulture. Inclusion of creative industries into the Arts Board mandate. Participation in SaskCulture's funding and eligibility reviews.	Implementation of agreement including responsibility for arts Provincial Cultural Organizations, festivals and media grants. Renewal of existing Strategic Plan to achieve greater inclusivity and longer-term impacts.
Establish indicators and targets for performance measures and determine initial benchmarks	Ability of the Arts Board to serve its mandate will be enhanced by the development of indicators and measures appropriate to the impact of the arts in society and the resources available to the agency.	Engagement of external resources to assist in assessment development in several areas, including the creative industries.	Establishment of performance assessment process and indicators in areas of access and participation and creative industries. Study impact of Independent Artists Grant program and pilot national ArtsSmarts participant impact assessment.
Convene Young Artists Advisory Panel to investigate opportunities for young people in the arts in Saskatchewan	An environment that retains and attracts young artists is critical to the health of the arts in Saskatchewan.	Convened two meetings with young artists in partnership with the Canada Council for the Arts, resulting in permanent panel. Results included in Next Generations Dialogues report.	Continue to meet with and renew the panel for dialogue, advice and direct input into the Arts Board's renewed Strategic Plan.

Sharon Nowlan of Regina was one of the first recipients of the Saskatchewan Foundation for the Arts Awards. Her award helps fund her performance, Prairie Fire Presents: The Follies, which premieres at the Regina International Fringe Festival in July 2008 before touring to Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Victoria. Other award recipients include visual artist Megan Morman, poet Jennifer Still, writer Devin Krukoff and musical group Rah Rah.

The Saskatchewan Foundation for the Arts, formed in 1999, gathers donations, bequests and planned gifts from individuals and corporations. The investment income from the donations supports arts activities in the province.

Management Responsibility for Financial Information

Management of the Saskatchewan Arts Board is responsible for the preparation and presentation of the financial statements and other financial information reported by the Board of Directors. This obligates management to use its best judgment in preparing and presenting financial information in accordance with established Board policy and principles which are acceptable to the accounting profession. The Board has established a system of internal controls to govern the management and accountability of financial resources entrusted to it. Management relies upon the system of internal controls to ensure that financial transactions are accurately recorded on a timely basis, are properly approved and result in reliable financial statements. It is, therefore, responsible for all amounts reported therein, including valuations determined externally by specialists. Management believes that the existing system of internal control provides a reasonable assurance that the assets are safeguarded and that the financial records are reliable for preparing financial information and maintaining accountability for assets. Management is responsible for providing reasonable assurances to the Board and the general public through the Legislature that the Board's financial information satisfies standards of validity and reliability. This requires that quantitative data be based on relative parameters of measurement that are consistently applied over time. Management provides the Board with the necessary information for it to make governance decisions at the highest meaningful level in connection with the objectives articulated in The Arts Board Act, 1997. Management discharges its responsibility for financial information under the stewardship of the Board and its Audit Committee. In accordance with Article 28 of The Arts Board Act, 1997 the Board's financial statements are audited annually by the Provincial Auditor or any other auditor or firm of auditors appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The Audit Committee is available to meet with the designated auditors as required.

On behalf of management:

Jeremy Morgan
Executive Director

Peter Sametz
Director of Operations

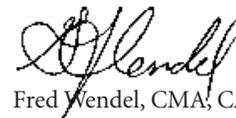

Auditor's Report

To the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan

I have audited the statement of financial position of the Saskatchewan Arts Board as at March 31, 2008 and the statement of operations and accumulated surplus, the statement of changes in net financial assets and the statement of cash flows for the year then ended. The Board's management is responsible for preparing these financial statements for Treasury Board's approval. My responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on my audit.

I conducted my audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that I plan and perform an audit to obtain reasonable assurance whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation.

In my opinion, these financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Board as at March 31, 2008 and the results of its operations and its cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with Canadian generally accepted accounting principles.

Regina, Saskatchewan
June 16, 2008

Fred Wendel, CMA, CA
Provincial Auditor

Notes to the Financial Statements

March 31, 2008

1. Purpose and Authority

The Saskatchewan Arts Board was established pursuant to The Arts Board Act. It has been continued under The Arts Board Act, 1997 (the Act). It exists to cultivate an environment in which the arts thrive for the benefit of everyone in Saskatchewan. The Act continues the Saskatchewan Arts Board Fund through which all financial transactions are conducted which pertain to fulfilling the purposes of the agency as indicated in the Act.

2. Significant Accounting Policies

These financial statements are prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles as recommended by the Public Sector Accounting Board of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. The significant policies are as follows:

- a) The Basis of Accounting
The financial statements are reported on the accrual basis of accounting.
- b) Collections
The Board maintains a collection of artworks and related archives in all forms in order to inform, enlighten, and enhance the lives of present and future generations. Works in the collection are acquired through purchase, commission, donation, or bequest.
 - i) Permanent Collection purchases are charged at cost as an expense in the Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus in the year of purchase.
 - ii) Donated works of art and archives for the Permanent Collection are recorded as revenue at their fair market value at the time of donation with a corresponding charge to expenses in the Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus.
 - iii) Musical instrument purchases are charged at cost as an expense in the Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus in the year of purchase.
- c) Tangible Capital Assets (see note h, below)
Leasehold improvements, equipment, and furnishings are recorded at cost less accumulated amortization. The net book value of these capital assets is detailed in Note 12(a). Tangible capital assets are amortized over their estimated useful lives. Leasehold improvements are amortized using the straight-line amortization method over the life of the lease. Equipment and furnishings are amortized using the straight-line amortization method.
The useful lives of tangible capital assets are as follows:

Electronic equipment	4 years
Other equipment	6 years
Furnishings	10 years
Leasehold improvements	Life of the lease
- d) Designated Assets
Internally - the Board periodically designates amounts from cash to be allocated for specified purposes. In designating these amounts, the Board takes into account the amounts and stated preferences of contributors. These amounts are not available for other purposes without approval of the Board.
Externally - the Board may receive cash with the stipulation it be used for specific purposes. These amounts are available only for the purposes stipulated by the contributor.
- e) Grant expenses
Grants are expensed when approved by the Board, the applicant has met the eligibility criteria, and the amount of the grant can be estimated.
- f) Cash
Cash consists of interest-bearing money on deposit with the bank. The interest rates range from 3.314% to 4.250% (2007 – 3.541% to 4.0%).
- g) Use of estimates
The preparation of financial statements in accordance with Canadian generally accepted accounting principles requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements, and the reported amounts of revenues and expenses during the reporting period. Assumptions underlying asset valuations are limited by the availability of reliable comparable data and the uncertainty of predictions concerning future events. The inherent uncertainty involved in making such estimates and assumptions may impact the actual results reported in future periods.
- h) Changes to accounting policies
In 2008, the Board amended its amortization policy. Leasehold improvements are to be amortized over the life of the lease rather than over the life of the lease and one renewal term. Equipment and furnishings are to be amortized using a residual value of $0. The impact of these changes in accounting policies on the carrying values of leasehold improvements in these financial statements is insignificant.

3. Pension Plan

Employees make contributions to the Public Employees Pension Plan, a defined contribution plan. Funding requirements are established by The Superannuation (Supplementary Provisions) Act. During the year, the employee contribution rate increased from 5.38% of gross salary to 5.84% and the employer contribution rate increased from 6.45% to 7%. This plan is fully funded. During the year the Board's total contributions were $ 64,479 (2007 - $49,534) and are included in Salaries and benefits in Note 7.

4. Financial Instruments

a) Fair value

The Board's significant financial instruments consist of cash, accounts receivable, loans receivable and accounts payable. The fair value of the loans receivable is $150,563 (2007 - $182,710). The fair values of the other financial instruments approximate their carrying value due to their short-term nature.

b) Credit risk

Credit risk is the risk that a party owing money to the Board will fail to discharge that responsibility. The Board is exposed to credit risk from the potential non-payment of accounts and loans receivable. The majority of accounts receivable were collected shortly after year-end. Loans receivable are secured against future grant allocations. Therefore, the credit risk is minimal.

5. Assessment Services

The Board has a standing partnership agreement with SaskCulture Inc. regarding responsibilities for jointly delivered programs, including principles involving the assessment and funding of provincial cultural organizations. In 2008, the Board recommended funding of $2,018,334 (2007 - $1,922,223) to be paid to nine organizations (2007- nine). Guidelines for allocating these funds to eligible applicants were pending as at March 31, 2008; accordingly, there were no program disbursements during the year.
