Artists Speak...

“Artistic expression is the paint on the canvas that is our province. It takes something otherwise functional and makes it not only liveable, but lovable. It is not just important but vital that we nurture our artists and help them to grow their skill, express their passions, and make Saskatchewan increasingly culturally relevant to Canada and beyond.”

“Having active artists involved in communities allows the vibrancy and culture to be expressed and cultivated. Art brightens and strengthens where we live, work, and play, and is vital for healthy people and communities.”

“Independent artists express our collective unconscious fears, dreams, desires, and stories in a creative, engaging, and provocative manner.”

“When the ‘children of Saskatchewan’ (children of all ages) express all that they have come to be, only then has Saskatchewan been truly expressed and our common identity shared. It is through the artist’s expression of our common experiences that we find the bond that makes us ‘Saskatchewan proud.’”

Letter of Transmittal

The Honourable Ken Cheveldayoff
Minister of Parks, Culture and Sport

Dear Minister Cheveldayoff:

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the Saskatchewan Arts Board, it is my pleasure to present to you the Annual Report of the Saskatchewan Arts Board for the period April 1, 2016, to March 31, 2017.

Respectfully submitted,

Pamella Acton, Chair

Message from the Chair

All places in our province are creative by nature and all people in our province are creative and artistic by nature. The Saskatchewan Arts Board has established policy priorities with an emphasis on becoming a champion of the arts. We believe strongly in the people of this province and in their power to build community through the arts.

Creative placemaking is a popular term being used today. It means that the importance of providing opportunities for communities throughout our province to convene and facilitate connections on a regular basis is the role of art and of artists' work. This is just as important as providing financial support to communities.

Our Board presented a new three-year strategic plan that capitalizes on opportunities for public engagement. The arts are naturally inclined and uniquely equipped to leverage cultural engagement across diverse communities and to assist with performance gaps for high-needs groups. Arts are the legacy of all our citizens, regardless of where they live.

Our mission statement as stated below is reflective of this belief:

“The Saskatchewan Arts Board recognizes, encourages and supports the arts to enrich community well-being, creativity, diversity and artistic prosperity.”

As we seek to measure the value of art in our province, we need to become more engaged with other sectors in confronting societal issues. Supporting arts in this context can be seen as an investment, promoting healthier conversations, and more robust engagement on a collective basis. The Saskatchewan Arts Board's delivery of programs like LIVE Arts is a living example of a common concert with partners from other domains with tools in hand!

Looking across disciplines allows us to think more holistically about what meaningful community life is all about in our province.

Our Goal 1 in our strategic plan is:

The Arts Board will take a leadership role in fearlessly advocating for Saskatchewan art and artists. We will promote the value of a thriving art sector and capitalize on all opportunities to grow awareness of who we are and the work we do.

The arts are important everywhere and can exist and flourish anywhere in our province, in small places as well as large places. Creativity is an inherent need of all people, and so artists can be discovered in the most unusual places.

Our Board has toiled diligently to support and sustain the arts in a climate of economic recessions, technological disruptions, and at times, perceived indifference. We have rallied to counter these challenges by campaigning vigorously to increase appreciation and support for the arts, safeguarding the role that the arts and artists play in fostering our province's and our nation's culture. We will continue to do everything we can to help build and sustain the well-being of our arts sectors.

With creativity, you can make the world!

Pamella Acton

Message from the Chief Executive Officer

Cultivating the Arts

During 2016/17, the Board of Directors at the Saskatchewan Arts Board revisited our organizational tagline, looking for a phrase that could encapsulate our work and speak to who we are as an agency. After considering a number of alternatives, we landed on the phrase, “cultivating the arts.” We were all pleased with the manner in which that phrase seemed to capture our work and speak to Saskatchewan’s character.

When that became the theme of this annual report, however, the phrase was more challenging for me. How could I speak to the theme of “cultivating,” particularly in a province with such a strong agricultural heritage, as a person who only moved to Saskatchewan in 2015, and who had lived my entire life in large cities?

As I often did when I was working as a stage director and might be struggling to organize my thoughts around a difficult passage in a script, I turned to the dictionary. I was particularly intrigued by the secondary definitions for the verb “cultivate”:

- to make the mind or feelings more educated and sensitive; or
- to try to acquire or develop a talent, attitude, or manner.

These definitions spoke, not only to the work that we do, but directly to the stories in this annual report. Consider the minds and feelings that were moved in remote northern communities as a result of Felipe Gomez’s Bike and Bass Tour. Look at the different ways in which the Caligari Project challenged Regina audiences to consider German Expressionism. Imagine how Anna Mazurik’s dreams were furthered through her attendance at “boot camp”. And this is just a handful of the stories in this report – every one of these amazing articles speaks to ways in which minds and feelings became more educated or sensitive and to opportunities for communities and individuals to develop talents.

As I read through the stories, I was also struck by the way in which these are the stories of individuals. Even when reporting on the work of a company or the efforts of a community, the voices that stand out are cultivating the minds and feelings of others. This emphasis on the individual feels both to grow from and to reflect this province’s agrarian history.

For the Arts Board’s ability to do this work and to tell these stories, I am grateful to the individuals with whom I work – Board and staff at the Saskatchewan Arts Board. Without their dedication, commitment and expertise, our “cultivating” could never achieve such bountiful results.

Engaging Modern Audiences

In the 2000s, media attention on the Saskatoon Symphony Orchestra (SSO) often featured their financial difficulties and personnel issues. The organization struggled to deal with urgent situations. However, in the last few years, the SSO has adjusted its business model and is turning its financials around. There has been a focus on increasing subscriptions, ticket sales and community engagement.

Mark Turner joined the organization as Executive Director in 2014. He reduced spending, restructured staffing, implemented new programming and budget practices and changed the organization's marketing strategies. He was nominated for a 2016 Saskatchewan Arts Award in the Leadership – Individual category for his efforts.

The SSO, which receives funding from the Professional Arts Organizations Program, is dedicated to recruiting the next generation of symphony-goers. "We have an active social media presence, reaching out to a younger audience in the places they communicate," Turner says.

Striving to perform works that resonate and engage with audiences, the symphony often features new Canadian music by living composers. "Tchaikovsky wrote for his audience. While audiences are still fans of his work, they may not find it as relevant or immediate because he wasn't composing for the cellphone generation," Turner notes.

The orchestra works with emerging artists to expand their repertoire, encouraging them to perform works that highlight their talents while challenging them to learn new pieces. "We have phenomenal Saskatchewan musicians who went on to national or even international careers. They love coming back to play to a hometown audience," he says.

The orchestra has begun working with the First Nations community through programming and education initiatives, recently performing with award-winning Inuk throat singer Tanya Tagaq and students from Thunderchild First Nation. "It was an artistic highlight in our 85-year history. We learned so much and were profoundly impacted by the collaboration on stage," Turner says.

The SSO is committed to being an active voice of Truth and Reconciliation in the community. "Artists can discuss very deep, difficult topics in a safe environment for all parties." The orchestra is commissioning work by First Nations composers for its upcoming seasons.

"I believe that the strength of an orchestra lies in what it gives to its audience. People come to a concert to be moved, challenged and inspired. We focus on creating those musical moments for them," he says.

Actor Goes to Boot Camp

Saskatoon actor Anna Mazurik graduated with a BFA in drama in May 2016, but she knew she would need further training to make a living doing what she loves.

A Premier's Centennial Arts Scholarship enabled her to attend the Globe Theatre Actor Training Conservatory Program. The rigorous program is akin to actor boot camp – eight hours a day, six days a week, for sixteen weeks. “The chance to interact, observe and learn from top industry professionals is an incredible opportunity. You make connections that benefit you later in your career,” she says.

The program also pushed her to address the doubtful voice in her head that was telling her she wasn't good enough. “I had to come to terms with that voice, acknowledging and accepting that it's there and moving past it. That voice can really impede your ability to create and your confidence.”

The scholarship gave Mazurik more than just financial support. “The application made me write down my career goals, explain why this program was important to me and solidify my long-term goals. I haven't had to articulate that before. It made me realize why theatre is so important to me, and how I fell in love with the art of acting.”

Since finishing the program, Mazurik has assisted in Shakespeare workshops for K-12 students across the province; attended the Cinequest Film Festival in California for The Tinwife, a Saskatchewan-made film she is featured in; performed in Les Liasons Dangereuses with Live Five in Saskatoon; and debuts on the main stage at Shakespeare on the Saskatchewan in summer 2017.

“A lot of Saskatchewan actors are told that we either need to choose between Vancouver and Toronto if we want to make it. I'm interested in staying here,” she says. “My goal is to create shows that celebrate diversity and provide a voice for those who are too often silenced, to present work that asks challenging questions of the audience. In doing that, I can assist in creating a thriving culture and greater sense of community in Saskatchewan.”

Creative Entrepreneurs

Ode to Moe, 2017
mixed acrylic medium

Tracy Buechler, a mixed-media artist from Warman, has learned that being an artist isn't only about making art. "You have to be business-minded as well," she says. "You can be an artist, but you don't have to be a starving artist."

She came to this discovery while taking the Arts Entrepreneurship and Business Development Course, offered by the Saskatchewan Arts Board in partnership with Creative Saskatchewan. The course helps Saskatchewan artists and arts entrepreneurs develop sustainable careers and business ventures. It has been delivered in Lloydminster, Yorkton, Swift Current, Saskatoon and Regina, and an online version is planned for 2017.

The classroom version of the course takes place over three weekend sessions. The first workshop is designed to give participants an improved understanding of themselves as entrepreneurs. The second offers them new insights into how to market work, manage profits wisely and protect themselves and their creative products. The third helps them develop personalized roadmaps they can follow to launch or grow their ventures. By the end of the course, participants have a career or business model, a long-term plan to achieve their goals, and a peer network to draw upon.

Traditional Aboriginal beader Angèle Tousignant has run businesses in the retail and restaurant sector, "but I didn't have an idea how to apply those skills to the business of art," she says. "The course helped me figure out how to price my work so I will make a profit but it's still reasonable for the customer."

Buechler is already feeling the impact of the course on her career. "It has given me confidence to present myself in business forums. I can be both an artist and a creative entrepreneur," she says, adding that these kinds of courses should be offered at art schools. "It's important, and times are different. We can't hone out a living so easily anymore," she says.

A Passion for Music and Adventure

Felipe Gomez on his Bike and Bass Tour

In fall 2016, Saskatoon musician Felipe Gomez strapped his bass guitar to his bicycle and set off on a tour of northern Saskatchewan. His Bike and Bass Tour visited communities and schools from Saskatoon to Uranium City and included cycling on ice highways in -35° Celsius weather. The tour was supported by a Culture on the Go – Touring grant.

Gomez has been touring Canada on his bicycle for the past four years, logging more than 13,000 kilometres and 200 shows and public speaking events. "Playing bars and clubs wasn't giving me any new inspiration," he says. "I decided that I wanted to have a more adventurous life – it is my hope to inspire people to explore Canada, experience the outdoors and embrace the wide diversity of art, cultures, landscapes and wildlife that Canada has to offer."

In past tours, Gomez developed relationships with rural and First Nations communities throughout the country. When he heard about tragic events in the north part of the province, he knew he had to take his tour north to share his art and positive message with young people. He played shows and conducted workshops in 18 northern community schools over the course of four months.

The show begins with Gomez's arrival at the school on his bicycle, where he carries everything he needs for his journey – his bass, amp, shelter and food. He performs songs inspired by his adventures on the road and tells stories about his experiences and the skills he required to succeed.

His greatest reward is the love he receives from students, many of whom message him on social media after he's left the community. "I've been impressed with the response."

On his long commutes between communities, Gomez often listens to audio books, but mostly, he daydreams about his next show, his next adventure. Now that the northern Saskatchewan tour is complete, he is performing in northern communities in Manitoba, will cycle to perform at the Indigenous Music Awards in Winnipeg, and has a southern Saskatchewan tour planned for the fall.

COLD ZODIAC AND BUTCHERED PIG

Onward the fairweather spleen.
Onward the season of vent and caprice.

Giovedì Grasso flies the meat, trees still larded with winter grease—
ice, the Dead Time, the Flensing Time.

Flirt fattened Thursday of December's gorge.
The twelve pigs of the zodiac stew the zeal,
slow simmering giddy fizzling squeals.

Uncloister the close-air surgical theater.
Ungristle the knife-jester's grip.

Let the butcher carnival begin!

"Cold Zodiac and Butchered Pig" by Sylvia Legris, from The Hideous Hidden, copyright ©2016 by Sylvia Legris. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp.

When Saskatoon poet Sylvia Legris was published in The New Yorker in 2014, she realized that this one appearance could potentially reach more readers than all other publications in her lifetime, combined.

The New Yorker has a print circulation of 1.4 million copies, plus its online readership. "It means more people see your name in passing and, hopefully, more people read your work," she says. "When you send work to other magazines and your name rings a bell, they take a closer look.

Especially if you're a Canadian submitting to international publications."

New Directions Publishing in New York not only took a closer look at Legris' work, but they also published her most recent volumes of poetry, Pneumatic Antiphonal (2013) and The Hideous Hidden (2016). The creation of both works were supported by Saskatchewan Arts Board Independent Artists grants. Legris was also honoured by the Arts Board with the 2014 Saskatchewan Artist Award at the Lieutenant Governor's Arts Awards.

Legris, the only Saskatchewan writer who has won the prestigious Griffin Poetry Prize, says her work has had a "problem" for a long time, because it is not easily compartmentalized. "When I was first starting to write, people would say my work wasn't like anyone else's. It was meant as a criticism, but now I think it's a good thing," she says. "I read very widely and take in all kinds of source material. The stuff that I like to read doesn't fall into any particular camp, and my work doesn't either."

The question that underlies all of Legris' work is, "How do you create poetry from a body of knowledge that seems fundamentally non-poetic?"

The Hideous Hidden, for example, explores the histories of medicine, dissection and anatomy. Her current project, Garden Physic, delves into early plant-based pharmaceuticals.

In 2016, she launched The Hideous Hidden with readings in New York, Toronto, Winnipeg and Saskatoon. UK magazines Granta, Prac Crit and The Poetry Review have all shown interest in her work, publishing poetry from The Hideous Hidden as well as new pieces.

Legris is drawn to poetry because of its musicality and attention to language. "I like how elastic poetry can be and how it can incorporate the best parts of language and music. When they're working as one beautiful machine, it can be a pretty remarkable thing," she says.

Mixing Traditional with Contemporary

Michel Boutin, Artistic Director of the Indigenous Peoples Artist Collective of Prince Albert (IPAC), says the growth in First Nations and Métis populations in the province, particularly in the north, provides an opportunity for greater cultural understanding. “Many local audience members have never been exposed to contemporary Aboriginal art, especially performance art,” he says.

IPAC is dedicated to sharing interdisciplinary contemporary Aboriginal and urban art practices with northern audiences. The organization, which receives funding from the Professional Arts Organizations Program, helps people of all ages feel comfortable at events by mixing traditional customs with contemporary arts. For example, they host traditional Aboriginal feasts of bannock and stew every night of their annual Two Story Café arts festival. “It’s not pretentious. We include youth and traditional celebration in our festival, creating an atmosphere that feels a bit like a powwow,” Boutin says.

The festival fosters collaboration among established national and international contemporary Aboriginal artists and local emerging artists, featuring visual art, performance art, media art and music. Artists also work with schools, universities and the community, offering drop-in studio sessions, artist talks and conferences. Urban art forms such as hip hop, spoken word, graffiti, tattoo art, and digital media help youth and underrepresented communities establish their voices.

IPAC celebrated its tenth anniversary in 2016 by producing three art exhibitions in partnership with the Mann Art Gallery in Prince Albert. It began development of the first in a series of member catalogues and the exhibition, The History of IPAC: Ten Years in the Making. Work on both continues, with the hope of touring the exhibition.

Community outreach has become important to the organization over the years. IPAC has partnered with the local multicultural centre to reach out to new Canadians and introduce them to Indigenous art. The organization also works with the LGBTQ community in Prince Albert, hosting a mini-festival each spring in collaboration with Regina’s Queer City Cinema. Partnering with Saskatoon Community Youth Arts Programming (SCYAP) helps IPAC develop a provincial role for the future generation of Aboriginal artists. “We don’t want to become a static institution. We’re always working with new artists,” Boutin says.

2016 Saskatchewan Arts Awards

The Saskatchewan Arts Awards celebrates the achievements of individuals, groups and organizations in all arts disciplines. On October 18, 2016, recipients were given awards in six categories at a gala event held at Casino Regina Show Lounge. Presented by the Saskatchewan Arts Board, the awards (formerly called the Lieutenant Governor's Arts Awards) are among the highest honours in Saskatchewan's artistic landscape.

The evening brought hundreds of artists, arts organizations, patrons of the arts and members of the business community together to champion the enormous contributions the arts community makes to our province's quality of life.

Audiences were treated to a host of performances and artistic displays. Artwork from the Saskatchewan Arts Board Permanent Collection was showcased in the reception area. During the ceremony, rock band Rah Rah and hip hop artist InfoRed took the stage, and Prairie Puppet Underground along with Deaf Crows provided insightful entertainment. There was even a screening of a short film by Heather Benning, The Dollhouse.

Robin Poitras, co-founder of New Dance Horizons and recipient of the Lieutenant Governor's Lifetime Achievement Award, said her nomination by artist Jeannie Mah came as a great surprise. Throughout the process of gathering materials for the nomination process, Poitras reflected on three decades of dance. "The whole dialogue throughout the nomination made me realize I've been doing something for a lifetime. Time has a different dimension in dance. I had this sense of time being crunched into a moment – wow 30 years!" When the award announcement came, Poitras said she was touched by the outpouring of support from the local arts community and the Saskatchewan Arts Board.

Along with cash prizes for each award, winners were also given a one-of-a-kind sculpture by ceramicist Jody Greenman-Barber.

The 2016 award recipients were:

An Undeniable Achievement

Regina singer/songwriter Melanie Hankewich, best known by her stage name Belle Plaine, has been a full-time, touring musician for the past five years. Her music crosses the genres of country, folk and jazz, and she has three albums and an EP under her belt.

In December 2016, she tackled a new challenge, performing her original songs with the Regina Symphony Orchestra (RSO). Hankewich received a Saskatchewan Arts Board Independent Artists grant to create orchestral arrangements of four of her songs for the concert: the unreleased song, "Radio Dreams," as well as "Crashing Through" from her album The Unrequited Love, and "Old Love" and "Legendary" from Notes from a Waitress.

"Performing with a symphony is a privilege, and I'm grateful that the Regina Symphony Orchestra offered me this opportunity. It's a dream of mine to have my music realized in this way," she says. "This is an undeniable achievement for me."

She hopes the performance will result in more opportunities to perform with symphonies or chamber players, leading her to be recognized as an artist capable of travelling to other cities to perform with symphonies, similar to Canadian singer/songwriters such as Jill Barber and Sarah Slean.

Given this was her first collaboration with an orchestra, Hankewich reached out to other artists to serve as mentors to assist her through the process. One was Michael Wojewoda, an engineer/producer from Ontario who has worked with Buffy Sainte-Marie and Amelia Curran. Another was Saskatchewan singer/songwriter Jeffery Straker, who has performed with symphonies several times. Both connected her with orchestral arrangers who would suit her songs. She worked with two arrangers — Drew Jureka of Toronto and Regina's Steve Leidal — to create the arrangements for the RSO concert.

Hankewich's multi-genre music is accessible to audiences of all ages. "Authentic connection is the most important element of music for me. My hope is that my audience finds relevance in my songs and can relate the subject material to the experiences in their own lives," she says.

Keeping Traditions Alive

People in the northern community of Cumberland House Cree Nation were constantly approaching addictions worker Eleanor Cook to ask if she would develop programming for adults. “There is a lack of activities in our community for adults, young mothers and people with addictions. We also need to get youth involved in activities to keep them out of trouble,” she says.

Cook wanted to offer traditional sewing classes taught by Elders, but there were no funds available from the band. Then, at a training program in Prince Albert, she heard about Saskatchewan Arts Board Indigenous Pathways Initiatives grants. “It was a blessing to us. I never thought I’d be able to do something for my clients.”

She received two grants: one in 2015 for a traditional beadwork project and another in 2016 for quilt-making. There was a strong response from the community, with people of all ages participating, from high school students to grandmothers.

“This has brought people together who didn’t associate with each other before. Now, they’re visiting and helping each other,” Cook says. “This is what the community needs.” The project also made a difference in the lives of her clients. “It got them doing something instead of turning to alcohol and drugs. It got them away from their addictions twice a week.”

Many participants doubted their abilities at first and worried about making mistakes. Elders guided them through the process, emphasizing learning rather than perfection. “People would gather around the table—even while they were sewing—to listen to the Elders’ stories,” says Cook. Elders appreciated the opportunity to share their knowledge and skills with the next generation, keeping traditions alive.

The participants’ sense of accomplishment was palpable. “When they’ve completed a project, you can see it in their eyes. They’re so happy and proud of what they’ve achieved in making,” she says.

Although the project covered by the grant is complete, people continue to come each week to sew and enjoy each other’s company. Cook is approaching the band council for funding to extend the project. “Hopefully, they will give it to us. If not, we’ll just continue.”

Dene artist Catherine Blackburn grew up watching her grandmother make traditional beaded garments, gloves and mukluks. “My grandmother is a beadwork artist, though she wouldn’t call herself that,” she says. “Traditionally, garment-making expressed a woman’s love and pride in her family’s achievements. I am inspired by the pride that once defined women in their communities through garment-making.”

Blackburn is exploring beadwork with a modern twist, combining traditional elements with a futuristic style to make “new world armour.” By fusing together plastic beads, she creates garments based on traditional female clothing from different First Nations, speaking to the diversity of Canada’s Aboriginal women.

“Beadwork, itself, has survived through the assimilation processes in Canada. It’s not a dead art form. It’s part of our future and a symbol of strength,” the Leask-based artist says.

She sees the plastic beads as a metaphor. “Due to its extreme resistance to natural biodegradation, it has a place in our future, corresponding to the resilience and survival of Aboriginal women. By finding new uses for plastic through garment-making, I am commenting on the relationship between Aboriginal women and the land in terms of ingenuity and adaptation to environment.”

An Independent Artists grant supported Blackburn in creating seven outfits and accessorized them with beaded medallions representing different Indigenous languages.

These outfits will be modelled by women who have influenced Blackburn’s life. She will photograph them in positions of strength, creating individual life-sized prints and a panoramic photo of the women standing in solidarity.

The work is booked for exhibition at the Mann Art Gallery in Prince Albert for fall 2018, with the possibility of touring to other public galleries in the province.

Blackburn is also being featured nationally. A pair of her beaded mukluks, purchased by the Saskatchewan Arts Board’s Permanent Collection, were included in a 2016 exhibition at the Textile Museum of Canada. A series of pincushions with tongue-based photo-transfer images, representing the loss of traditional Aboriginal languages, will be presented at the Bonavista Biennale in 2017, as part of Canada’s 150th anniversary celebrations. “I want people to be aware of some of that darker history of Canada’s colonial past. It’s important for that to be showcased along with the celebratory side of the show.”

Social Awareness through Art

How much work does it take to create a textile from start to finish? This question was explored by Grades 7 and 8 students at Goodsoil Central School in northwest Saskatchewan, with funding from an Artists in Schools grant. Local fibre artist Kara Perpelitz walked the students through the process, giving them freshly shorn wool to clean, dye, spin and weave.

Art teacher Jessica Lepitzki says that the project combined elements of the art and social studies curriculum to teach students about where their clothing comes from, so they may make socially conscious choices. “We wanted to help them identify with the workers, some of whom may be their ages, employed in various settings and often in unfair contracts.”

She says students were surprised at the working conditions, such as safety issues and low pay, facing garment workers overseas. “It never crossed their minds that people overseas wouldn’t have the same rights as we do in Canada.”

Other subjects covered by the project include science (dye safety and chemical reactions), math (cost of textiles) and practical and applied arts (different weaving techniques.)

“For the kids, it’s a lot easier to see how these things work together when they have specific subjects coming together. They were able to work through the concept rather than read about it,” Lepitzki notes.

She reached out to Chief Napew Memorial School on nearby Big Island Lake Cree Nation to include their students in the art workshops. “Although they are in close proximity, students at the two schools never see each other. It gave them the opportunity to talk and to be exposed to ideas and thoughts that were different than what they would experience on a daily basis,” she says.

Final textile projects were exhibited throughout the community of Goodsoil, with displays of work set up in the credit union, library and health centre. Students also gave spinning and weaving demonstrations at the library.

Lepitzki feels it was positive experience for students to work with a local professional artist. “I wanted them to see that everyone can be an artist and you don’t have to live in a city to do it.”

Summer School for the Arts

A 100-year-old building in downtown Fort Qu'Appelle is a hub for arts activity in the area. The Qu'Appelle Valley Centre for the Arts (QVCA) rents out its space for pottery classes, artists' studios, pop-up art markets, art exhibitions and performances. Entirely volunteer-driven, the organization receives no core funding. In 2016, an Arts After Hours grant enabled QVCA to undertake its first program, a summer school for the arts.

"There is no arts programming – or even sports – in Fort Qu'Appelle when school is out. There is a real need in the community for something like this," says QVCA volunteer Janet Stoody.

The organization partnered with Regina's New Dance Horizons to present the Valley Arts Pelican Project. Artistic Director Robin Poitras collaborated with 6 artists and 30 participants over the course of 10 days.

The school was interdisciplinary, combining visual art, music, dance and local history. A potter showed young people how to work with clay. A Métis fiddler brought in a variety of fiddles for the youth to play and taught them traditional jigs. A First Nations artist took participants on tours of historic sites and talked to them about the importance of the treaties. "We filled a need for art practice, for beauty, for historical exploration and for being outdoors," says Stoody.

The project culminated in a performance at the town's Mid Summer's Arts Festival. "There was a hush as we came onto the grounds. It was a thrilling experience for all of us," she says. After the parade, the group performed 11 choreographed pieces accompanied by a mini-orchestra of violins and ukulele. "Parents and families were really grateful that there had been such amazing, professional artists here working with their children."

The summer school brought people into the QVCA who had never been there before, growing the organization's clientele and building volunteers' skills. "We've learned about grant writing and delivering our own programming with a partner. We are always diversifying our capacity for new opportunities," Stoody says.

A Personal Connection

Linda Mikolayenko enjoyed listening to her parents' stories while she was growing up, but she never thought that storytelling could be a profession, much less her own.

When an artist-in-residence engaged students at her children's school with oral storytelling, Mikolayenko realized, "This is something I can do, too!" She was inspired again when Indigenous storyteller Joseph Naytowhow visited her community of Air Ronge. "Joseph was telling stories from his heritage. I thought, 'I have my own heritage – who is telling the Ukrainian stories?'"

She researched Ukrainian folk tales and began sharing them with children in the community and at local events. She looked for other opportunities, but her remote northern location proved challenging. "I've had inquiries from people who want to have me come, but they can't afford to pay my mileage or hotel," she says.

Fortunately, a Culture on the Go – Event Travel grant made it possible for her to participate in the Year of the Saskatchewan-Ukrainian Festival in Regina in 2016. The festival featured a cultural exchange between members of the Ukrainian and Aboriginal communities. Mikolayenko and Elder Hazel Dixon shared stories from each of their traditions and engaged in a dialogue with audiences about the sources of their stories, why they tell stories and how stories evolve. They discovered that both Ukrainian and Aboriginal stories often include elements of nature, particularly animals, to help give a message.

"I do not have many opportunities to perform in the southern part of the province. Many listeners were hearing me for the first time, and many were introduced to the art of storytelling for the first time. One of the festival volunteers asked me, 'How come I've never heard of storytelling before?'" Mikolayenko says.

"What I love about storytelling is that there is a very personal connection that is made between the storyteller and the audience. The stories that I tell are ones that resonate for me, and I never know exactly what it will touch in the people who are listening."

Changing with the Times

The ecology of theatre in Saskatchewan and beyond has evolved in the last few years. While many playwrights continue to write scripts on their own, there is a trend toward devised theatre, where writers and actors collaborate to develop plays through improvisation. And more and more plays are self-produced.

The Saskatchewan Playwrights Centre (SPC) has adapted its programming to serve the needs of the theatre community. “We’re making a conscious effort to reach out to theatre creators and younger theatre artists and try to be helpful in a real, contemporary way,” says Andrew Johnston, Artistic Director and General Manager. The centre supports the development of local plays and playwrights in a risk-friendly environment, ensuring Saskatchewan voices are heard. It receives funding from the Professional Arts Organizations Program.

Dramaturgy, supporting script development, has always been at the core of the organization’s activities. In recent years, SPC has added production dramaturgy to help playwrights develop production plans and budgets, and even suggests technical support personnel, such as designers and stage managers.

SPC has developed relationships with the Globe Theatre in Regina and Gordon Tootoosis Nîkānîwin Theatre in Saskatoon to offer dramaturgical services to playwrights scheduled to appear in their seasons. Another collaboration is with Live Five Theatre in Saskatoon, where a Saskatchewan playwright’s self-produced play will be presented each season. The Saskatchewan Festival of Words in Moose Jaw features a play chosen from those premiered at the SPC’s Spring Festival of New Plays. As well, the first-prize recipient of the organization’s annual 24-Hour Playwriting Competition may choose between a slot in the Regina Fringe Festival or $500 in cash.

SPC has also offered incubator sessions that bring together artists from different genres — from theatre to dance to media arts — to work on collaborative projects. “We are creating a vocabulary for artists to work together,” says Johnston. For the past two years, the organization has brought directors from theatres across Canada to its Spring Festival of New Plays to support the work of local playwrights. This has led to a partnership with Factory Theatre in Toronto, where there will be a public reading of a Saskatchewan play. “We are bringing expertise in, and we’re also getting our playwrights known outside the province,” Johnston says.

The Power of Everyday Experience

For most of her career, visual artist Heather Cline has incorporated regional history into her work. About 10 years ago, she began exploring the question, “Who gets to make history?”

The Regina artist says, “I think there’s real power in people’s everyday experience. Often simple everyday stories point to larger historical issues.” Although it was a decade away, she considered Canada’s 150th anniversary and determined that creating a touring exhibition of visual art and personal narrative would be a fitting way to mark the occasion.

Through Quiet Stories from Canadian Places, Cline engaged communities by interviewing people about their experiences of various Canadian locations. She used drone shots, videos and still photos as visual references. “I’m fascinated by how personal history intersects with human geography. My project involves merging collage soundscapes with lush, intricate paintings of everyday places,” she says.

Cline didn’t seek out specific demographics or large centres for the project, instead focusing on smaller communities, often in states of transition. She spoke with people from the ages of 5 to 92, with diverse demographic and cultural backgrounds, in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. “I interviewed people from all over Canada, even though I only worked in those specific places. Some of the best stories were about places people had lived in, in the past and places across Canada where they had travelled,” she notes.

The exhibition contains approximately 50 paintings and more than 200 audio stories, though Cline collected far more than that. “I have enough stories for this project that I could keep working on it for another 10 years,” she laughs. It will tour through six different Western Canadian sites in 2017-18, in celebration of the country’s sesquicentennial.

“This project is a huge challenge to my art practice. I wanted to create a narrative environment using audio stories and paintings to share my personal explorations of Canadian society with gallery visitors. I want to shift how the audience views the paintings by the audio stories that I choose to share with them,” Cline says.

A Unique Fusion

Upon creating his first concerto for orchestra and guitar, Ramses Calderon learned an important lesson. “When you write a solo for an instrument, you have to allow the instrument to breathe. The concerto is almost 16 minutes, and the guitar is playing the whole time. That’s quite tiring for the hands!” he laughs.

Currently residing in Regina, Calderon was born in El Salvador. He has composed original works for professional musicians and orchestras, including the Regina Symphony Chamber Players, the Guatemalan Youth Orchestra, the El Salvador Symphony Orchestra and the Holguin Symphony Orchestra in Cuba. He has also composed pieces for various community projects and organizations in Saskatchewan.

Calderon incorporates traditional instruments and rhythms into his music and compositions. The result of his creation process is a unique fusion of classical, traditional and popular music.

“Concierto de las Ninfas” or “Concert of the Nymphs” was composed over a six-month period in 2015-16, with the help of an Independent Artists grant. The work explores Calderon’s cultural roots and contains a variety of influences from the Americas, Spain and Arabic countries. The piece is unique in its use of quarter tones, in contrast with the half and whole tones used in Western music. “I like to experiment with microtonal music. When we listen to quartertone music, we think it’s out of tune,” he says.

To perform the piece, Calderon required two guitars — one fretted and one fretless. But travelling with two guitars is difficult, so he and a friend from Ecuador designed a double-necked classical guitar. “Flip it over, and you have two guitars in one!” he exclaims.

Calderon will be taking the concerto on tour in August 2017, supported by a Culture on the Go grant. He will perform in Regina, then travel to Costa Rica, Paraguay, Uruguay and El Salvador.

He believes music is a profound tool for communicating with one another. “It’s very important to create and compose music to help people to connect with themselves. Music is just not for pleasure. It has a deeper meaning of touching our souls to help us become better human beings,” he says.

Voice from the Wilderness

It is not every day that a documentarian becomes the subject of another's film; however, Jason Britski wanted the world to know about Saskatchewan ecologist and filmmaker Robert J. Long.

In his feature-length documentary, Voice from the Wilderness, Britski explores Long's 45-year career and provides a platform for his message about climate change. "Bob's view of the ramifications of climate change and the future for humanity are quite sobering. He has spent his entire career providing warnings of danger on the horizon, and he feels that predictions are occurring more rapidly than expected," he says.

Britski was particularly attracted to the project because, although Long had a successful career as a filmmaker, he has viewed his life's work as a failure. "It was his hope to leave a profound impact upon an audience and change our perceptions about the natural world. I think, to some degree, he has been successful in that endeavour. However, he feels that his message was disregarded, and maybe he is correct," Britski says. "I found it interesting to find a filmmaker who was conflicted in this way about their work. There is a sense of pride about everything he has done, but there also exists this hollow feeling that we have not done enough."

Long granted Britski access to his massive film, video and sound archive – more than 3,000 hours of footage shot over the course of four decades. It took Britski a full year to narrow that down to 1,200 hours of footage for editing. He took Long's strongest imagery and his own footage that he had shot to create an 89-minute documentary. From research to post-production, the film took four years to make.

The documentary, which was supported by an Independent Artists grant, has been an official selection at 29 film festivals in 11 countries in 2016-17, and it won or was nominated for awards at 16 of them. Britski wants local audiences to see the film and has plans for a Regina screening. "I think it's important that people come and see his work and his story, his message, because he is such a pillar of the community as a filmmaker and an ecologist, yet is relatively unknown to the public," he says.

Small City, Big Reputation

For a small city, Estevan is developing a big reputation for professional theatre. Souris Valley Theatre presents two plays each summer, to the delight of southern Saskatchewan audiences. “A goal of mine with the company is to present audiences with high-quality professional theatre in their own backyard. A big priority for the company is to continue to grow the theatrical community in Saskatchewan,” says Artistic Director Kenn McLeod.

In 2016, the theatre’s production of a locally written show, Volstead Blues, was supported by an Artists in Communities grant. The play tells the story of a tumultuous time in the city’s history and serves as a reminder of the persevering spirit of the community.

“It was great to showcase a story that was written as Souris Valley Theatre was first being created [in 1990],” McLeod says. “It is always a joy for me to have audiences familiar with the characters in the shows, not because they know the show, but rather because they know these characters in their own lives. ‘Oh that guy is just like Uncle Ted!’ or ‘That is the same conversation I had with my own mother!’”

The theatre has become a coveted destination for professional actors, who live on site during productions. “Each year, I get more and more Saskatchewan theatre artists contacting me about when it will be their turn to come down to Estevan to play,” says McLeod.

Providing Saskatchewan actors the opportunity to hone their craft within our borders is a top priority for Souris Valley Theatre. “As a Saskatchewan artist, I want to see others succeed. To do this, they need the opportunity to showcase the great work that they are capable of in the province that raised them, or that they now call home,” McLeod says.

“Saskatchewan has an incredible resource in its people, and its artists are no exception.”

Ring the Bell for German Expressionism

German Expressionism, an early 20th-century art movement, celebrated its centennial in 2016. To mark the occasion, a group of Regina artists, known as the Cabinet Collective, put together The Caligari Project Festival of German Expressionism, held from September to December 2016.

The arts festival, supported by a SaskFestivals grant, included film, theatre, dance, music and visual art, from contemporary collaborations to century-old archival works. It provided an opportunity for artists and cultural community members to create new work and share what they do best with local audiences.

A driving vision behind the Cabinet Collective board – Chrystene Ells, Berny Hi, Rowan Pantel and Gerald Saul – is the cross-pollination of artists, audiences and organizations. “A great example of this was the Prairie Night Light Lantern and Puppet Procession, which brought together organizations that had never worked collaboratively before,” says Hi. These included Das Schulhaus (Regina’s German-language school), New Dance Horizons and Prairie Puppet Underground.

A range of approximately 25 arts and academic activities and events were held. Participants included the Regina Public Library, Dunlop Art Gallery, University of Regina, Art Gallery of Regina, Regina Symphony Orchestra, MacKenzie Art Gallery, Saskatchewan Filmpool Cooperative, mispon, Articulate Ink, FadaDance and many more.

The marquee event was the screening of the quintessential German Expressionist film, The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. The vintage work, digitized from an old, scratchy 16mm print, was accompanied by members of the Regina Symphony Orchestra, playing live to a new score by award-winning composer Jason Cullimore and conducted by Maestro Victor Sawa. Cullimore received an Independent Artists grant to compose the score.

Ells and Hi also received an Independent Artists grant to create Der Glöckner (“The Bell Ringer”). The 10-minute film is an homage love letter to German Expressionism. With no voice dialogue and limited title cards, the character-driven story progresses visually. Hi says, “We hope to inspire others to take risks, to live their lives and to attend to the questions and creatures in the shadows.”

70 Years of Film

During World War II, the Canadian government established film councils across the country to disseminate news of the war effort. In 1947, the Yorkton Film Council realized this equipment and expertise could be repurposed to host a film festival. “When they first formed the festival, people in Toronto said, ‘No way will this last.’ Well, we showed them!” laughs Randy Goulden, Executive Director of the Yorkton Film Festival (YFF).

A lot has changed over the last seven decades, particularly in technology. “Early on, we received film submissions on big reels. Then it went to VHS, then to DVDs and now, it’s all digital. We do our screenings off a hard drive,” says Goulden. The digital progression also allows the YFF more flexibility in delivering filmmaking workshops in high schools across Canada. “You used to need large cameras and projectors, but now, you can get apps to make films on your phone.”

The festival, supported by funding from the SaskFestivals program, affords filmmakers and delegates many opportunities for professional development and networking. “Filmmakers can meet broadcasters and decision-makers in the film industry in an informal setting. In bigger festivals, they may get five minutes with these people. In Yorkton, they interact with them the whole weekend,” Goulden says. “These informal one-on-ones have resulted in many deals brokered at the Yorkton Film Festival.”

Delegates and the public may elect to attend traditional program screenings with filmmakers in attendance or go off on their own to watch films on individual screens provided by the festival. There are unique opportunities to mix and mingle with the Yorkton community, such as the annual lobster festival, complete with skeet shooting.

Any film submitted to the festival becomes part of its archive, which is available for screening by schools, libraries and other organizations across the country. “We get over 250 submissions per year. Any type of request that comes in, we usually have a film for it,” says Goulden.

What hasn't changed in 70 years are the contributions of the many dedicated volunteers who make the festival a success.

“There is no doubt in my mind that it's the people that have provided for the longevity of the festival. We have volunteers who really believe in us,” she says.

A Comedic Tale of Self-discovery

Salt Baby* has come a long way, both geographically and artistically, since it premiered in Regina in 2015.

The semi-autobiographical show written by Falen Johnson has been described as “a comedic tale of self-discovery.” In the play, Salt Baby struggles to fit in at home on the Six Nations Reserve and in the city. She is of First Nations heritage but looks white, leading to complicated, conflicting emotions about which culture she fits best.

A Culture on the Go – Touring grant enabled the production to travel to four communities in the Yukon, as well as to Kitchener-Waterloo, Ontario, and Six Nations Reserve in Ontario, in September 2016. The show also ran as part of Live Five’s season in Saskatoon in May 2016, and at the Globe Theatre in early 2017.

The northern tour reached almost 1,000 people, many of whom are Indigenous. Communities in the Yukon have less exposure to theatre. “High-quality, professional work created by Indigenous artists, featuring Indigenous actors, offers options to people who can feel limited by the opportunities in their communities,” says director Yvette Nolan.

She shares an example of the excitement the production brought to small communities: “The owner of the gas station in Rancheria, where we had gassed up, closed up and drove his family 142 kilometres along the Alaska Highway to see the show.”

The tour made an impact on the actors as well, helping them understand what life is like in remote northern communities, where there may only be one restaurant and one store, and where food is incredibly expensive. “It forces us to see our own privilege and be more empathetic to the challenges of not having that kind of privilege,” Nolan says.

She also notes that for the Indigenous actors in the show, playing before largely Indigenous audiences was empowering and affirming. The final stop on the tour was in the playwright’s home community of Six Nations Reserve. “It was like a rock-and-roll show! People were laughing at things audiences had never laughed at before. The show was so close to their own hearts. It was such a great way to close the tour.”

Artists Give Back

Two influential Saskatchewan artists have made major donations of their artwork to the Saskatchewan Arts Board's Permanent Collection. Saskatoon artist Greg Hardy donated 10 of his paintings, and Regina sculptor Jack Sures donated 30 of his ceramic pieces. The value of the donations has been appraised at more than $160,000.

Hardy donated some of his favourite recent works, created between 2005 to 2014. The landscape paintings represent different areas of the province that have inspired him, such as Grasslands National Park. "I know the Arts Board will find appropriate places for the work to get exhibited and shown," he says. "Over the years, they've supported individual artists through the granting process and through their collection. The collection represents artists who have made a significant contribution to the province."

Sures had a basement full of his art, dating from 1971 to 2008. He invited Arts Board staff to select pieces for the collection that represent the scope of his career. "Artists make art to be seen, not to lie in storage. What better place for it than a body that disperses art throughout the province?" he says.

The Permanent Collection includes approximately 3,000 works of 750 artists and represents the work of Saskatchewan artists over the past six decades.

In Memory

Frank Asapace grew up on Kawacatoose First Nation. He was a champion traditional powwow dancer who once performed for Queen Elizabeth II. In 2008, Frank appeared in the film, The Englishman's Boy, an adaptation of the Guy Vanderhaeghe novel about the Cypress Hills Massacre. He also worked as a round dance and powwow announcer and recently appeared in his powwow regalia in a music video for rapper Joey Stylez.

Bonnie Bernard was an author who lived for many years in Regina, where she served as the literary consultant at the Saskatchewan Arts Board, before moving to London, Ontario. She won a string of awards for her work, including the prestigious Giller Prize for A Good House, the Saskatchewan Book of the Year Award for Casino & Other Stories and the Commonwealth Best First Book Award for Women of Influence.

Gus Froese was a teacher in Moose Jaw for 23 years, leaving the profession in 1977 to pursue his true passion as a full-time artist. He was an integral part of the arts community in Moose Jaw, painting many of the city's iconic murals. Gus taught art workshops, served on the boards of the Saskatchewan Arts Board and the Moose Jaw Art Museum and was recognized with several awards. His work is part of the Saskatchewan Arts Board's Permanent Collection.

Eric Greenway was a talented member of the Saskatchewan writing community. Many will remember his stimulating work as the editor of Freelance. Eric was co-publisher of Hagios Press and was employed at the Saskatchewan Writers' Guild as the communications and development officer from 1999 to 2002.

Stuart Hamilton, originally from Regina, was the first music director of the Canadian Opera Company Ensemble. He was a gifted pianist and coach for many singers. His lifelong influence in the country's musical world landed him several honours, including the Order of Canada, the Toronto Arts Award and the Governor General's Award commemorating Canada's 125th year.

Howard Leyton-Brown was a musician and teacher who relocated to Regina from the UK in 1952. He was founding chair of the Department of Music at the University of Regina. Howard was active as a soloist and conductor, notably of the Regina Symphony Orchestra, and served on the boards of many organizations dedicated to music and the performing arts. He was a Member of the Order of Canada and the Saskatchewan Order of Merit.

Augie Merasty wrote the book, The Education of Augie Merasty: A Residential School Memoir, with the help of author David Carpenter. It covers Augie's time in the St. Therese Residential School in Sturgeon Landing between 1935 and 1944. The book was selected to the One Book, One Province program in 2017, which will see people in communities across the province read and discuss the memoir.

Wynona Mulcaster was an influential artist and mentor. In the late 1930s, she helped create the precursor to the Emma Lake Artists' Workshops. She studied in Montreal and Banff before becoming an associate professor at the University of Saskatchewan from 1964 to 1977. Her work is in many public collections, including those of the Remai Modern and the Saskatchewan Arts Board. She was given the Arts Board's Lifetime Award for Excellence in the Arts in 1993.

Sheila Roberts was a champion for artists' rights and the arts who worked tirelessly on artist equity initiatives. Her commitment contributed to Saskatchewan gaining status of the artist/arts professions legislation. Sheila made a huge impact on the development of the film and video sector in the province and contributed to the formation of SaskFilm, SCN and SMPA. She also served for many years as the Saskatchewan ACTRA Branch representative.

Noel Sandomirsky was a Regina Court of Queen's Bench family division judge. He previously served on the boards of the Saskatchewan Arts Board and the Globe Theatre. Noel appreciated good jazz, well-designed cars and original art.

Tyrone Tootoosis was a key figure in the Indigenous performing arts as well as in Cree linguistics and history, serving as a "story keeper." He was central to the development of Wanuskewin Heritage Park. Tyrone also played the role of Chief Poundmaker, a distant relative, in a number of feature films. He received the 2008 Lieutenant Governor's Arts Award, presented by the Saskatchewan Arts Board, to honour his work as an educator and mentor.

Janet Wright was a Genie and Gemini Award-winning actress best known for her portrayal of the long-suffering matriarch, Emma Leroy, on the television show, Corner Gas. She was co-founder of Saskatoon's Persephone Theatre and performed at and directed for many major theatre companies across Canada.

Strategic Planning

In August 2016, our Board of Directors held a strategic planning retreat that included staff representatives from across our full spectrum of programs and services. Our work relied heavily on information gleaned during public consultations that had occurred over the past year, and it began with a review of our mission statement, visions and values in light of the internal and external context in which the Arts Board is operating.

In October, we published our new strategic plan for 2016 through 2019, focused around specific tasks that would help us work towards three primary goals. We are pleased to report on the progress that we have made to date.

Goal 1: Champion of the Arts

- We have engaged an independent research company to investigate themes, messages and communication tactics that were involved in public awareness campaigns that celebrated the arts in other jurisdictions. We believe that our learning from this research will help us shape a dynamic campaign that will be effective for Saskatchewan.
- We are in the process of building new tools to help grantees promote the value of their work and the importance of public support for the arts, including mechanisms to track the attendance of elected representatives at funded activities.

Goal 2: Art- and Artist-Centred

- Program reviews have been completed for both the Professional Arts Organizations Program and Independent Artists program. Well ahead of schedule, we have also been working diligently on a review of our programs that support Indigenous artists.
- We have developed exciting new programs to serve rural and remote communities, including a Program Consultant in situ initiative and a Regional Gallery Partnership. Watch for more details as we look for resources to launch these programs in 2017/18.
- The Arts Board is moving towards online application processes. This work is currently on schedule, with a view to implementing the new system during 2018/19.

Goal 3: Public Engagement

- The Arts Board is becoming more proficient at tracking the engagement of people—all around Saskatchewan—in the activities that we support. Please refer to the details, including map and statistics, offered with this article.
- Arts Board staff has been building new partnerships that could help us expand our programming for the arts community. We are hoping that this could bring additional resources in 2017/18, particularly for our Independent Artists grant program.

MANAGEMENT RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL INFORMATION

Management of the Saskatchewan Arts Board is responsible for the preparation and presentation of the financial statements and other financial information reported by the Board of Directors. This obligates management to use its best judgment in preparing and presenting financial information in accordance with established Board policy and principles which are acceptable to the accounting profession.

The Board has established a system of internal controls to govern the management and accountability of financial resources entrusted to it. Management relies upon the system of internal controls to ensure that financial transactions are accurately recorded on a timely basis, are properly approved and result in reliable financial statements. It is, therefore, responsible for all amounts reported therein, including valuations determined externally by specialists. Management believes that the existing system of internal control provides a reasonable assurance that the assets are safeguarded and that the financial records are reliable for preparing financial information and maintaining accountability for assets. Management is responsible for providing reasonable assurances to the Board and the general public through the Legislature that the Board's financial information satisfies standards of validity and reliability. This requires that quantitative data be based on relevant parameters of measurement that are consistently applied over time.

Management provides the Board with the necessary information for it to make governance decisions at the highest meaningful level in connection with the objectives articulated in The Arts Board Act, 1997. Management discharges its responsibility for financial information under the stewardship of the Board and its Finance Committee.

In accordance with Article 28 of The Arts Board Act, 1997 the Board's financial statements are audited annually by the Provincial Auditor or any other auditor or firm of auditors appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The Finance Committee is available to meet with the designated auditors as required.

On behalf of management:

Michael Jones
Chief Executive Officer

INDEPENDENT AUDITOR'S REPORT

To: The Members of the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan

I have audited the accompanying financial statements of the Saskatchewan Arts Board, which comprise the statement of financial position as at March 31, 2017, and the statements of operations and accumulated surplus, changes in net financial assets and cash flows for the year then ended, and a summary of significant accounting policies and other explanatory information.

Management's Responsibility for the Financial Statements

Management is responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of these financial statements in accordance with Canadian public sector accounting standards for Treasury Board's approval, and for such internal control as management determines is necessary to enable the preparation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

Auditor's Responsibility

My responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on my audit. I conducted my audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that I comply with ethical requirements and plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free from material misstatement.

An audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. The procedures selected depend on the auditor's judgment, including the assessment of the risks of material misstatement of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error. In making those risk assessments, the auditor considers internal control relevant to the entity's preparation and fair presentation of the financial statements in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the entity's internal control. An audit also includes evaluating the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the financial statements.

I believe that the audit evidence I have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for my audit opinion.

Opinion

In my opinion, the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Saskatchewan Arts Board as at March 31, 2017, and the results of its operations, changes in net financial assets and cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with Canadian public sector accounting standards.

1. PURPOSE AND AUTHORITY

The Saskatchewan Arts Board was established pursuant to The Arts Board Act. It has been continued under The Arts Board Act, 1997 (the Act). It recognizes, encourages, and supports the arts to enrich community well-being, creativity, diversity, and artistic prosperity. The Act continues the Saskatchewan Arts Board Fund through which all financial transactions are conducted which pertain to fulfilling the purposes of the agency as indicated in the Act.

2. SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

These financial statements are prepared in accordance with Canadian public sector accounting standards issued by the Public Sector Accounting Board. These statements do not present a Statement of Remeasurement Gains and Losses as it is not practical to determine the unrealized portion of investment income relating to its investments. As a result, all income attributable to its investments is recorded in Investment income on the Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus. The significant policies are as follows:

a) Collections

The Board maintains a collection of artworks and related archives in all forms in order to inform, enlighten, and enhance the lives of present and future generations. Works in the collection are acquired through purchase, commission, donation, or bequest.

- i) Permanent Collection purchases are charged at cost as an expense in the Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus in the year of purchase.
- ii) Donated works of art and archives for the Permanent Collection are recorded as revenue at their fair market value at the time of donation with a corresponding charge to expenses in the Statement of Operations and Accumulated Surplus.

b) Tangible Capital Assets

Leasehold improvements, equipment, and furnishings are recorded at cost less accumulated amortization. The net book value of these capital assets is detailed in Note 14. Tangible capital assets are amortized on a straight-line basis over their estimated useful lives which are as follows:

Electronic equipment	4 years
Other equipment	6 years
Furnishings	10 years
Leasehold improvements	Life of the lease

Tangible capital and other non-financial assets are accounted for as assets by the Board because they can be used to provide Board services in future periods. These assets do not normally provide resources to discharge the liabilities of the Board unless they are sold.

c) Restricted Assets

Externally: the Board may receive cash with the stipulation it be used for specific purposes. These amounts are available only for the purposes stipulated by the contributor.

Designated Assets: the Board periodically restricts amounts from cash to be allocated for specified purposes. In restricting these amounts, the Board takes into account the amounts and stated preferences of contributors. These amounts are not available for other purposes without approval of the Board of Directors

d) Grant Expenses

Except where specified by direct Board motion, grants are expensed in the year in which they are budgeted and approved by the Board, the applicant has met the eligibility criteria, and the amount of the grant can be estimated.

e) Cash

Cash consists of interest-bearing money on deposit with the bank. The interest rate during the year was 0.70% (2016: 0.70% to 0.85%).

f) Use of Estimates

The preparation of financial statements in accordance with Canadian generally accepted accounting principles for Public Sector requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements, and the reported amounts of revenues and expenses during the reporting period. Assumptions underlying asset valuations are limited by the availability of reliable comparable data and the uncertainty of predictions concerning future events. The inherent uncertainty involved in making such estimates and assumptions may impact the actual results reported in future periods. Differences are recorded in current operations when identified.

The primary measurement uncertainty arising from the use of estimates which may affect reported amounts relates to the values of loans receivable, accounts receivable, and tangible capital assets.

g) Revenues

Revenues are recognized as they are earned and measurable.

Government transfers are recognized in the financial statements in the period in which the transfer is authorized, eligibility criteria are met, and reasonable estimates of the amount can be made.

Deferred revenue represents user charges and other fees which have been collected, for which the related services have yet to be provided. These amounts will be recognized as revenue in the fiscal year the services are provided.

h) Investments

A new investment manager was hired during the year. The Board's funds have been invested into an assortment of pooled funds. These pooled funds include Canadian, U.S., and international equities; bonds; and cash and cash equivalents. Such funds are valued daily based on the closing prices of the securities held in the funds.

3. PENSION PLAN

Employees make contributions to the Public Employees’ Pension Plan, a defined contribution plan. Funding requirements are established by The Public Employees Pension Plan Act. During the year, the employee contribution rate remained at 6.25%, and the employer contribution rate also remained at 7.25% for in-scope employees. The out-of-scope employee contribution rate remained at 6% and employer contribution rate increased to 7.60% (2016: 7.50%). During the year, the Board’s total contributions were $96,411 (2016: $85,030) and are included in Salaries and benefits in Note 7.

4. FAIR VALUE OF FINANCIAL INSTRUMENTS

The Board’s significant financial instruments consist of cash, investments, accounts receivable, loans receivable and accounts payable. The fair value of the loans receivable is not readily determinable due to the nature of the loans as described in Note 8 and Note 15. As described in Note 2h, the investments are carried at fair value. The fair values of the other financial instruments approximate their carrying value due to their short-term nature.

The investments are classified using a hierarchy that reflects the significance of the inputs used in determining their measurements.

Under the classification structure, financial instruments recorded at unadjusted quoted prices in active markets for identical assets and liabilities are classified as Level 1. Instruments valued using inputs other than quoted prices included in Level 1 that are observable for the asset or liability either directly or indirectly are classified as Level 2. Instruments valued using inputs that are not based on observable market data are classified as Level 3.

The following table classifies the investments’ financial instruments within this fair value hierarchy, with the current year table restructured in accordance with the new investment portfolio:

2017 Pooled Funds	Level 1	Level 2	Level 3	Total

11. INVESTMENT PERFORMANCE

The Board's investments are represented by the amounts held by the investment manager (see Note 2h). The following is a summary of the investment performance:

	2017	Four-year annualized return
Actual (a)	8.7%	4.0%
Benchmark (b)	5.0 to 6.0 %	5.0 to 6.0%

a) The annual returns are net of investment expenses.

b) The benchmark return is the Board's target rate of return for its investments. The benchmark return is based on the performance of the Board's planned investment portfolio.

The funds are invested based on the Board's investment policy. The Board pays investment management fees and custodial fees for these services.

12. FINANCIAL RISK MANAGEMENT

The nature of the Board's operations result in a statement of financial position that consists primarily of financial instruments. The risks that arise are credit risk, liquidity risk, and market risk (consisting of interest rate risk, foreign exchange risk and equity price risk).

Significant financial risks are related to the Board's investments. These financial risks are managed by having an Investment Policy that provides guidelines to the Board's investment manager for the asset mix of the portfolio regarding quality and quantity of fixed income and equity investments. The asset mix helps to reduce the impact of market value fluctuations by requiring investments in different asset classes and in domestic and foreign markets. The Board reviews regular compliance reports from its investment manager as to its compliance with the Investment Policy.

a) Credit risk

Credit risk is the risk that a party owing money to the Board will fail to discharge that responsibility. The Board is exposed to credit risk from the potential non-payment of accounts and loans receivable. Loans receivable: operations are secured against grant allocations. Therefore, the credit risk is minimal. All loans receivable – Flexible Loan Program have been paid, and there are none outstanding.

Credit risk within investments is primarily related to fixed-income pooled funds. It is managed through the Board's investment policy that limits these fixed term investments to those of high credit quality (BBB is the minimum rating for bonds and the minimum quality rating of any short-term note is R-1 Low as rated by DBRS). The maximum credit risk the investments is exposed to at March 31, 2017 is limited to $2.2 million (2016: $2.6 million) which represents investment in bonds; and cash and cash equivalents.

b) Liquidity risk

Liquidity risk is the risk that the Board will encounter in meeting obligations associated with financial liabilities. The Board is exposed to low liquidity risk. This is managed through prudent financial management and oversight.

c) Market risk

Market risk is the risk that arises from changes in the value of financial instruments. Values can be affected by changes in interest rates, foreign exchange rates and equity prices. Market risk primarily impacts the value of the investments.

Interest rate risk

Investments are exposed to changes in interest rates in their fixed-income investments. Duration is a measure used to estimate the extent that market values of fixed-income instruments change with changes in interest rates. Using this measure, it is estimated that an increase of 100 basis points in interest rates would decrease net assets by $0.14 million, representing 7.3% of the $1.9 million fair value of fixed income investments.

Foreign exchange

Investments are exposed to changes in the U.S. dollar exchange through their U.S. Equities. Also, they are exposed to international currencies through their International Equities. As at March 31, 2017, the investments' exposure to U.S. Equities was 19.6% (2016: 21.0%), and their exposure to International Equities was 19.7% (2016: 21.6%).

Equity prices

Investments are exposed to changes in equity prices in Canadian, U.S., and international markets through their equity investments. Equities comprise 62.3% (2016: 53.1%) of the carrying value of the investments. The Investment Policy limits the investment in equities to no more than 25% of the total market value of the fund in any one index-defined corporate group.

13. CONTINGENT LIABILITIES

The Arts Board has been named as a co-defendant in two claims that have been served prior to 2014. One claim has been settled during the year. As at March 31, 2017, the likelihood of resolution of the remaining claim against the Arts Board is not determinable.

In 2013, the Board entered into an agreement with the Ministry of Parks, Culture and Sport to repurpose $1,000,000 from the Flexible Loan Program for disbursement as grants to support creative industry projects through the Creative Industries Transition Fund, a program established for this purpose.
